Syn.: ability, capacity, efficacy, efficiency, energy, force, might, strength. Power is the most general term of this group of words, including every quality, property, or faculty by which any change, effect, or result is, or may be, produced; as, the power of the legislature to enact laws, or of the executive to enforce them; the power of an acid to corrode a metal; the power of a polished surface to reflect light. Ability is nearly coextensive with power, but does not reach the positiveness and vigor that may be included in the meaning of power, ability often implying latent, as distinguished from active, power; we speak of an exertion of power, but not of an exertion of ability. Power and ability include capacity, which is power to receive; but ability is often distinguished from capacity, as power that may be manifested in doing, as capacity is in receiving; one may have great capacity for acquiring knowledge, and yet not possess ability to teach. Efficiency is active power to effect a definite result, the power that actually does, as distinguished from that which may do. Efficiency is effectual agency, competent power; efficiency is applied in mechanics as denoting the ratio of the effect produced to the power expended in producing it; but this word is chiefly used of intelligent agents as denoting the quality that brings all one's power to bear promptly and to the best purpose on the thing to be done. See ABILITY; CAUSE; GENIUS; INFLUENCE; WEIGHT.—Ant.: feebleness, helplessness, imbecility, impotence, inability, incapability, incapacity, inertness, powerlessness, weakness.—Central Powers, Austria-Hungary, Bulgaria, Germany, and Turkey during the World War, 1914–18.

praise, 1 prēz; 2 prāz, vt. [PRAISED; PRAIS'ING.] 1. To express approval and commendation of; applaud; eulogize. 2. To express adoration of; laud or glorify. [< OF. praisier, < LL. pretio, prize, < L. pretium, price.] Syn.: adore, applaud, approve, bless, celebrate, commend, eulogize, extol, flatter, glorify, honor, laud, magnify, worship. See PUFF.—Ant.: see synonyms for ASPERSE; BLAME.

praise, n. 1. Commendation expressed, as of a person for his virtues, or concerning meritorious actions; applause. 2. Thanksgiving for blessings conferred; laudation to God. 3. The object, ground, reason, or subject of praise.

Syn.: acclaim, acclamation, adulation, applause, approbation, approval, cheering, compliment, encomium, eulogy, flattery, laudation, panegyric, plaudit, sycophancy. Praise is the hearty approval of an individual, or of a number or multitude considered individually, and is expressed by spoken or written words; applause, the spontaneous outburst of many at once. Applause is expressed in any way, by stamping of feet, clapping of hands, waving of handkerchiefs, etc., as well as by the voice; acclamation is the spontaneous and hearty approval of many at once, and strictly by the voice alone. Thus one is chosen moderator by acclamation when he receives a practically unanimous viva voce vote; we could not say he was nominated by applause. Acclaim is the more poetic term for acclamation, commonly understood in a loftier sense; as, a nation's acclaim. Plaudit is a shout of applause, and is commonly used in the plural; as, the plaudits of a throng. Applause is also used in the general sense of praise. Approbation is a milder and more qualified word than praise; while praise is always uttered, approbation may be silent. Acceptance refers to an object or action; approbation may refer to character or natural traits. Approval always supposes a testing or careful examination, and frequently implies official sanction; approbation may be upon a general view. The industry and intelligence of a clerk win his employer's approbation; his decision in a special instance receives his approval. Praise is always understood as genuine and sincere, unless the contrary is expressly stated: compliment is a light form of praise that may or may not be sincere; flattery is always insincere. Compare APPLAUSE; EULOGY.—Ant.: abuse, animadversion, blame, censure, condemnation, contempt, denunciation, disapprobation, disapproval, disparagement, hissing, ignominy, obloquy, reproach, reproof, repudiation, scorn, slander, vilification, vituperation.

preach[t], 1 prēch; 2 prēch, v. I. t. 1. To deliver, as a sermon on a text of Scripture or some religious topic. 2. To advocate after the manner of a preacher; recommend urgently. 3. To bring into a condition or affect in some specified way by preaching. 4‖. To proclaim. II. i. 1. To discourse publicly on a text of Scripture or a religious topic. 2. To inculcate matters of advice or instruction earnestly and zealously. 3. To converse in didactic monolog. [< L.[OF] prædico, proclaim.] — preach'er, n. One who discourses publicly on religious subjects.— preach'i-fy, vi. [Colloq.] To discourse tediously.— preach"i-fi-ca'tion, n.—preach'ing, n. The act or practise of preaching; the style or method of a preacher, or the doctrine preached.—preach'ment, n. A religious or moral lecture; sermon; harangue.

pre-ad'am-ite, 1 prī-ad'am-aıt; 2 prē-ăd'am-ıt. I. a. Existing before Adam; relating to the preadamites. pre"adam'ic‡; pre-ad"am-it'ic or -i-cal‡. II. n. 1. One who or that which existed before Adam or before man. 2. One holding that there were men on the earth before Adam.

pre'am"bl(e[F], 1 prī'am"bl; 2 prē'ăm"bl, n. A statement introductory to and explanatory of what follows. [< LL. præambulo, walk before.]—pre-am'bu-la-to-ry†, a. Walking or going before; preceding; previous.

preb'end, 1 preb'end; 2 prēb'ĕnd, n. 1. The stipend of a prebendary. 2. Same as PREBENDARY. [< L. præbendus, ger. of præbeo, offer, < præ, before, + habeo, have.]—preb'en-dal, a.—preb'en-da-ry, n. A person, as a canon, who receives a stated income from the revenues of a cathedral.

Preb'le, 1 preb'l; 2 prēb'l, n. 1. Edward (1761–1807), an American commodore. 2. George Henry (1816–1885), an American commodore.

prec., abbr. Preceding.

pre-ca'ri-ous, 1 prı-kē'rı-us; 2 pre-cā'ri-ŭs, a. 1. Subject to continued risk; uncertain. 2. Subject or leading to danger. 3. Not firmly established; untrustworthy. [< L. precarius, obtained by entreaty.] -ly, adv. -ness, n.

Syn.: doubtful, dubious, equivocal, hazardous, insecure, perilous, risky, unassured, uncertain, unsettled, unstable, unsteady. Uncertain is applied to things that human knowledge can not certainly determine or that human power can not certainly control; precarious originally meant dependent on the will of another, and now, by extension of meaning, dependent on chance or hazard, with manifest unfavorable possibility verging toward probability; as, one holds office by a precarious tenure, or land by a precarious title; the strong man's hold on life is uncertain, the invalid's is precarious.—Ant.: assured, certain, firm, immutable, incontestable, settled, stable, steady, strong, sure, undoubted, unquestionable.

pre-cau'tion, 1 prı-kō'shən; 2 pre-cạ'shon, n. 1. Prudent forethought, as against danger, etc. 2. A provision made for some emergency. [OF., < L.[LL] præ, before, + caveo, avoid.] Syn.: see CARE.—pre-cau'tion-a-ry, a. pre-cau'tion-alt.—pre-cau'tious, a. -ly, adv. -ness, n.

pre-cede', 1 prı-sīd'; 2 pre-çēd', v. [PRE-CED'ED[d]; PRE-CED'ING.] I. t. 1. To go in advance of; hence, to outrank or excel. 2. To occur or exist before. 3. To place something before or in advance of; supply as with a prelude. II. i. 1. To go or walk before some one else; hence, to have the precedence. 2. To happen first. [< OF. preceder, < L. præcedo, < præ, before, + cedo, go.]

Syn.: be antecedent to, be anterior to, be earlier than, be in advance of, be previous to, be the forerunner or harbinger of, come before, exist before, forerun, go ahead of, go before, go or come sooner than, happen before, head, herald, lead, occur before, take precedence of, take place before, usher in. See LEAD.—Ant.: see synonyms for FOLLOW.

pre-ce'dence, n. The act or right of preceding. pre-ce'den-cy‡.

Syn.: antecedence, ascendency, lead, leadership, pre-eminence, preference, priority, superiority, supremacy.—Ant.: inferiority, subjection, subjugation, subordination.—Prep.: take precedence of.—pre-ce'dent, a. -ly, adv.

prec'e-dent, n. 1. Previous usage or established mode of procedure. 2. An antecedent. 3. A judicial decision considered as furnishing a rule for subsequent decisions. 4†. An original, as a rough draft.

Syn.: antecedent, case, example, instance, obiter dictum, pattern, warrant. A precedent is an authoritative case, example, or instance. The communism of the early Christians in Jerusalem is a wonderful example or instance of Christian liberality, but not a precedent for the universal church through all time. Cases decided by irregular or unauthorized tribunals are not precedents for the regular administration of law. An obiter dictum of a judge or court is an opinion outside of the case in hand, which can not be quoted as an authoritative precedent. See ANTECEDENT; CAUSE; EXAMPLE.

pre-cen'tor, 1 prı-sen'tər; 2 pre-çĕn'tor, n. The leader of the musical part of a church service. [< L. præ, before, + cano, sing.]

pre'cept, 1 prī'sept; 2 prē'çĕpt, n. 1. A prescribed rule of conduct or action; especially, a maxim in morals. 2. Law. A judicial command in writing; writ; process. [OF., < L. præceptum, < præcipio, take beforehand, admonish.] Syn.: see ADAGE; DOCTRINE.—pre-cep'tial†, a. Instructive.—pre-cep'tive[s], a. Consisting of precepts.—pre-cep'tor, n. 1. A teacher; instructor. 2. The superior of a preceptory of Knights Templars.—pre"cep-to'ri-al, a. —pre-cep'to-ry. I. a. Preceptive; mandatory. II. n. A place of instruction; specifically, a religious house of the Knights Templars.—pre-cep'tress, n. A female preceptor.

pre-ces'sion, 1 prı-seṡh'ən; 2 pre-çĕsh'on, n. The act of preceding or coming in advance of time or of other persons or things. [OF., < L. præcessus, pp. of præcedo; see PRECEDE.]—precession of the equinoxes, a slow motion of the equinoctial points on the ecliptic from east to west, causing the time between successive equinoxes to be appreciably shorter than it would otherwise be: caused by the attraction of the sun and moon upon the equatorial protuberance of the earth.—pre-ces'sion-al, a.

pre'cinct, 1 prī'siŋkt; 2 prē'çĭŋct, n. 1. A place definitely marked off by fixed lines. 2. A minor territorial or jurisdictional district. 3. The immediate neighborhood of a palace or a court. [< L. præ, before, + cingo, gird.]

pre"ci-os'i-ty, 1 preṡh"ı-os'ı-tı; 2 prēsh"ı-ŏs'ı-ty, n. Extreme fastidiousness, especially in speech.

pre'cious, 1 preṡh'us; 2 prēsh'ŭs, a. 1. Highly priced or prized, as for rarity, or for intrinsic, exchangeable, or other value; valuable. 2. Of a kind to excite peculiar affection; dear. 3. Blessed in enjoyment or benefit. 4. Ironically, good-for-nothing; undeserving. 5. [Colloq.] Very considerable. [< L.[OF] pretiosus, < pretium, price.] Syn.: see CHOICE; EXCELLENT; GOOD; RARE.—pre'cious-ly, adv.—pre'cious-ness, n.

prec'i-pice, 1 pres'ı-pis; 2 prĕç'ı-pīç, n. 1. A high and prec'i-pis[s], ‡ very steep cliff. 2. A perilous situation. 3†. The brink of such a cliff. [OF., < L. præcipitium, < præceps, headlong.]

pre-cip'i-tant, 1 prı-sip'ı-tənt; 2 pre-çĭp'i-tant. I. a. 1. Rushing or falling headlong. 2. Rash in thought or action. II. n. Chem. A reagent that when added or applied to a solution causes a precipitate of one or more of its constituents.—pre-cip'i-tance, n. The quality of being precipitant; rashness. pre-cip'i-tan-cy‡.

pre-cip'i-tate, 1 prı-sip'ı-tēt; 2 pre-çĭp'i-tāt, v. [-TAT"ED[d]; -TAT'ING.] I. t. 1. To throw down from a height. 2. To urge onward rashly; hasten. 3. To cause to fall or to gather upon surfaces by condensation. 4. Chem. To separate (a constituent) in solid form, as from a solution. II. i. 1. To fall headlong from a height. 2. Chem. To separate and subside, as a substance held in solution. [< L. præceps, headlong.]

pre-cip'i-tate, 1 prı-sip'ı-tıt; 2 pre-çĭp'i-tat. I. a. 1. Rushing down headlong, or moving onward hurriedly. 2. Hasty. 3. Advanced prematurely. II. n. A substance separated from a solution by chemical or other force not mechanical. Syn.: see IMPETUOUS.—pre-cip'i-ta-bil(e[ty], 1 prı-sip'ı-tə-bl; 2 pre-çĭp'i-ta-bl, a. Susceptible of being precipitated; as, a precipitable salt.—pre-cip'i-tant-ly, adv.—pre-cip'i-tate-ly, adv.—pre-cip'i-tate-ness, n.—pre-cip"i-ta'tion, n. 1. The act or process of precipitating. 2. The deposition of moisture from the atmosphere upon the surface of the earth.—pre-cip'i-ta"tor, n.—pre-cip'i-tous, a. 1. Similar to a precipice; very steep. 2. Headlong and downward in motion. 3. Headlong in disposition; precipitate; hasty. Syn.: see STEEP.—pre-cip'i-tous-ly, adv.—pre-cip'i-tous-ness, n.

pré"cis', 1 prē"sī'; 2 prę"çĭ', n. A summary; abstract. [F.]

pre-cise', 1 prı-sais'; 2 pre-çīs', a. 1. Sharply or clearly determined; strictly accurate; exact. 2. No more and no less than. 3. Noting or confined to a certain thing; particular; identical. 4. Scrupulously observant of rule; punctilious. [< L.[OF] præ, before, + cædo, cut.]

Syn.: accurate, careful, correct, definite, distinct, exact, explicit, faultless, flawless, minute, nice, particular, perfect, rigid, right, scrupulous, strict. Accurate, correct, definite, exact, precise. all denote absolute conformity to some external standard. Accurate (L. ad, to, + cura, care) indicates conformity secured by scrupulous care. An accurate measurement or account can be verified and found true in all particulars. The native English word careful (AS. caru, cearu, care) carries less sharp certainty; careful stupidity may blunder, accurate stupidity is almost unthinkable. Exact (L. ex, out, + ago, drive) indicates that which is worked out to the utmost limit of requirement in every respect; precise (L. precido, cut off, from præ, before, + caedo, cut) refers to a like conformity secured by cutting off all excess. Exact and precise are often interchangeable; but, as filling out is a greater achievement than cutting off, exact is the higher word; we speak of the exact sciences, not of the precise sciences. Hence, precise has often an invidious meaning, denoting excessive care of petty details: we speak of the martinet as insufferably precise, not insufferably exact. Correct (L. con-, together, + rego, rule) applies to a required or enforced correspondence with a standard. This is especially seen in the use of the verb; the printer corrects the proof. That is correct which is free from fault or mistake. Thus correct is lower in the scale than accurate, exact, or precise, which are positive, indicating attainment of the right, while correct is negative, denoting avoidance of the wrong; a composition may be correct, but intolerably dull; to speak of a correct statement or discrimination is to give very mild approval; an accurate statement or an exact discrimination is felt to have some noticeable excellence. Compare CORRECT; MINUTE.—Ant.: careless, doubtful, erroneous, false, faulty, inaccurate, inexact, loose, mistaken, misty, nebulous, untrue, vague, wrong.

—pre-cise'ly, adv.—pre-cise'ness, n.—pre-ci'sian, n. One who adheres punctiliously to rules and forms.—pre-ci'sion, n. The quality of being precise.—pre-ci-sion-ist, n.

pre-clude', 1 prı-klūd'; 2 pre-clud', vt. [PRE-CLUD'ED[d]; PRE-CLUD'ING.] 1. To render impossible or ineffectual by antecedent action; prevent. 2. To shut out; exclude. [< L. præ, before, + cludo, shut.]

Syn.: obviate, prevent. To obviate, strictly to stop the way of or remove from the way, is to prevent by interception, so that something that would naturally withstand or disturb may be kept from doing so; to preclude, to close or shut in advance, is to prevent by anticipation or by logical necessity; walls and bars precluded the possibility of escape; a supposition is precluded; a necessity or difficulty is obviated. Prevent, which at first had only the anticipatory meaning, has come to apply to the stopping of an action at any stage, so as to negative its completion or conclusion; the enemy passed the outworks and were barely prevented from capturing the fortress. Compare HINDER; PROHIBIT; SHUT.—Prep.: a person or thing is precluded from an act.—pre-clu'sion, n.—pre-clu'siv(es, a. -ly, adv.

pre-co'cious, 1 prı-kō'shus; 2 pre-cō'shŭs, a. Developing before the natural season; unusually forward; premature. [< OF. precoce, < L. præcox (-coc-), early ripe.] -ly, adv.—pre-coc'i-ty, n. The quality of being precocious; any premature growth. pre-co'cious-ness‡.

pre-cur'sor, 1 prı-kūr'sər; 2 pre-cûr'sor, n. One who or that which precedes and gives intimation of a coming event. [< L. præ, before, + curro, run.] Syn.: see HERALD.—pre-cur'so-ry, a. pre-cur'siv(es‡.

pred'a-to-ry, 1 pred'ə-to-rı; 2 prĕd'a-to-ry, a. 1. Characterized by or undertaken for plundering. 2. Addicted to pillaging. pre-da'cious or -ceous‡. 3. Constituted for living by preying upon others, as a beast or bird. [< L. prædatorius, < prædor; see PREY, v.]

pred"e-ces'sor, 1 pred"ı-ses'ər; 2 prĕd"e-çĕs'or, n. 1. One who goes or has gone before another in point of time; rarely, an ancestor. 2. A previous incumbent of an office. [< L.[OF] præ, before, + decessus, departure.]

pre-des'ti-nate, 1 prı-des'tı-nēt; 2 pre-dĕs'ti-nāt, vt. [-NAT"ED[d]; -NAT"ING.] To destine or decree beforehand or from the beginning of things; foreordain. Syn.: bias, partiality, preconception, prepossession, presumption, unfairness. A presumption (literally, a taking beforehand) is a partial decision formed in advance of argument or evidence, usually grounded on some general principle, and always held subject to revision upon fuller information. A prejudice or prepossession is grounded often on feeling, fancy, associations, etc. A prejudice against foreigners is very common in retired communities. There is always a presumption in favor of what exists, so that the burden of proof is upon one who advocates a change. A prepossession is always favorable, a prejudice always unfavorable, unless the contrary is expressly stated. See INJURY.—Ant.: certainty, conclusion, conviction, demonstration, evidence, necessary conclusion, reason, reasoning.—Prep.: against; rarely, in favor of; in one's favor.—prej"u-di'cial, a. Having a tendency to prejudice.—prej"u-di'cial-ly, adv.

Syn.: affectation, air, assumption, cloak, color, disguise, dissimulation, excuse, mask, pretension, pretext, ruse, seeming, semblance, show, simulation. A pretense, in the unfavorable, which is also the usual sense, is something advanced or displayed for the purpose of concealing the reality. A person makes a pretense of something for the credit or advantage to be gained by it; he makes what is allowed or approved a pretext for doing what would be opposed or condemned; a tricky schoolboy makes a pretense of doing an errand which he does not do, or he makes the actual doing of an errand a pretext for playing truant. A ruse is something (especially something slight or petty) employed to blind or deceive so as to mask an ulterior design, and enable a person to gain some end that he would not be allowed to approach directly. A pretension is a claim that is or may be contested; the word is now commonly used in an unfavorable sense. See DISGUISE; HYPOCRISY.—Ant.: actuality, candor, fact, guilelessness, honesty, ingenuousness, openness, reality, simplicity, sincerity, truth.

Syn.: anticipate, forestall. The original sense of prevent, to come before, act in advance of, which is now practically obsolete, was still in good use when the authorized version of the Bible was made, as appears in such passages as "When Peter was come into the house, Jesus prevented him" (i. e., accosted him first), Matt. xvii, 25; "Thou preventest him with the blessings of goodness" (i. e., by sending the blessings before the desire is formulated or expressed), Ps. xxi, 3. Anticipate is now the only single word usable in this sense; to forestall is to take or act in advance in one's own behalf and to the prejudice or hindrance of another or others, as in the phrase "to forestall the market." But to anticipate is very frequently used in the favorable sense; as, his thoughtful kindness anticipated my wish (i. e., met the wish before it was expressed); or we say "I was about to accost him when he anticipated me" (by speaking first); or one anticipates a payment (by making it before the time). For the present use of prevent, see synonyms for HINDER; PRECLUDE; PROHIBIT.—pre-vent'a-bl(eᴾ, a. That may be prevented. pre-vent'i-bl(eɪᵖ.—pre-vent"a-bil'i-ty, n.—pre-vent'er, n.—pre-ven'tion, n. 1. The act of preventing, or the state of being prevented. 2. A hindrance; obstruction. 3. A preventive.—pre-ven'tive(es. I. a. Intended or serving to ward off harm. II. n. That which prevents or hinders, as a medicine to ward off disease; a precautionary measure. -ly, adv.

pre'vi-ous, 1 prĭ'vɪ-us; 2 prē'vi-ŭs, a. Being or taking place before something else; antecedent; prior. [< L. præ. before, + via, way.]

Syn.: antecedent, anterior, earlier, foregoing, former, forward, front, introductory, precedent, preceding, preliminary, prior. Antecedent may denote simple priority in time, implying no direct connection between that which goes before and that which follows; as, the striking of one clock may be always antecedent to the striking of another with no causal connection between them. Antecedent and previous may refer to that which goes or happens at any distance in advance, preceding is limited to that which is immediately or next before; an antecedent event may have happened at any time before; the preceding transaction is the one completed just before the one with which it is compared; a previous statement or chapter may be in any part of the book that has gone before; the preceding statement or chapter comes next before without an interval. Previous often signifies first by right; as, a previous engagement. Foregoing is used only of that which is spoken or written; as, the foregoing statements. Anterior, while it can be used of time, is coming to be employed chiefly with reference to place; as, the anterior lobes of the brain. Prior bears exclusive reference to time, and commonly where that which is first in time is first also in right; as, a prior demand. Former is used of time, or of position in written or printed matter, not of space in general. We can say former times, a former chapter, etc., but not the former part of a garden; we should say the front part of the garden, the forward car of a train. Former has a close relation, or sharp contrast, with something following; the former always implies the latter, even when not fully expressed, as in Acts i, 1, and Eccles. vii, 10. Compare ANTECEDENT.—Ant.: after, concluding, consequent, following, hind, hinder, hindmost, later, latter, posterior, subsequent, succeeding.—Prep.: such was the state of things previous to the revolution. [Previous to is often used adverbially, in constructions where previously to would be more strictly correct; as, it was done previous to my departure.]

price, 1 prais; 2 prīc. I. vt. [PRICED†; PRIC'ING.] 1. To ask the price of. 2. To set a price upon; value; appraise. II. n. 1. An equivalent given or asked in exchange; valuation; cost (to the buyer): used also figuratively. 2‖. The quality of possessing value; worth; especially, high value. 3†. A prize. [< OF. pris, < L. pretium, price.]

Syn.: charge, cost, expenditure, expense, outlay, value, worth. The cost of a thing is all that has been expended upon it, whether in discovery, production, refinement, decoration, transportation, or otherwise, to bring it to its present condition in the hands of its present possessor; the price of a thing is what the seller asks for it. In regular business, as a rule, the seller's price on his wares must be more than their cost to him; when goods are sold, the price the buyer has paid becomes their cost to himself. In exceptional cases, when goods are sold at cost, the seller's price is made the same as the cost of the goods to him, the cost to the seller and the cost to the buyer becoming then identical. Price always implies that an article is for sale; what a man will not sell he declines to put a price on; hence the significance of the taunting proverb that "every man has his price." Value is the estimated equivalent for an article, whether the article is for sale or not; the market value is what it would bring if exposed for sale in the open market; the intrinsic value is the inherent utility of the article considered by itself alone; the market value of an old and rare volume may be very great, while its intrinsic value may be practically nothing. Value has always more reference to others' estimation (literally, what the thing will avail with others) than worth, which regards the thing in and by itself; thus, intrinsic value is a weaker expression than intrinsic worth. Charge has especial reference to services, expense to minor outlays; as, the charges of a lawyer or physician; traveling expenses; household expenses.—market price, the price that anything will bring in the open market.—to set a p. on one's head, to offer a reward for the capture of a person, dead or alive.—price'-cur"rent, n. A statement of the ruling price of stocks, merchandise, or other property at a given time or statedly, or the price itself.—price'less, a. 1. Beyond price or valuation; invaluable. 2†. Below price; worthless.—p.-list, n. A catalog of goods in which the prices are named. pride, 1 praid; 2 prīd. I. vt. & vi. [PRID'ED²; PRID'ING.] 1. To indulge in pride or self-gratulation; be exalted or elated; exult; glory: used reflexively. 2. To display or spread, as a bird its tail. II. n. 1. Undue sense of one's own superiority; inordinate self-esteem; arrogance or superciliousness. 2. A proper sense of personal dignity and worth; honorable self-respect or self-gratulation. 3. That of which one is justly proud; a cause of exultation. 4. The acme of excellence. 5. Consciousness of youth or power; high spirits; mettle. 6. Ostentatious splendor; display. [< AS. prȳte, < prȳt, proud.]

Syn.: conceit, ostentation, self-complacency, self-conceit, self-esteem, self-exaltation, self-respect, vainglory, vanity. Conceit and vanity are associated with weakness. pride with strength. Conceit may be founded upon nothing; pride is founded upon something that one is, or has, or has done; vanity, too, is commonly founded on something real, tho far slighter than would afford foundation for pride. Vanity is eager for admiration and praise. is elated if they are rendered and pained if they are withheld, and seeks them; pride could never solicit admiration or praise. Conceit is somewhat stronger than self-conceit. Self-conceit is ridiculous; conceit is offensive. Self-respect is a thoroughly worthy feeling; self-esteem is a more generous estimate of one's own character and abilities than the rest of the world is ready to allow. Vainglory is more pompous and boastful than vanity. There is a worthy and honorable pride, as in one's achievements, or character, or in one's position, especially as connected with the just expectations of others, or with one's obligations to them, which is closely synonymous with self-respect, keeping one up to his own best and highest action, and withholding from all that is ignoble or unworthy. Compare synonyms for ARROGANCE; EGOTISM; OSTENTATION; RESERVE.—Ant.: humility, lowliness, meekness, modesty, self-abasement, self-distrust.

pri-me'val, 1 prai-mī'val; 2 prī-mē'val, a. Belonging to the first ages; primitive in time; primary. [< L. primævus, youthful, < primus, first, + ævum, age.]

Syn.: aboriginal, ancient, autochthonic, immemorial, indigenous, native, old, original, primal, primary, prime, primitive, primordial, pristine. Aboriginal (L. ab, from, origo, origin) signifies pertaining to the aborigines or earliest known inhabitants of a country in the widest sense, including not merely human beings, but inferior animals and plants as well. Primeval (L. primum, first, and ævum, age) signifies strictly belonging to the first ages, earliest in time, but often only the earliest of which man knows or conceives. Immemorial. Prime and primary may signify either first in time, or more frequently first in importance; primary has also the sense of elementary or preparatory; we speak of a prime minister, a primary school. Primal is chiefly poetic, in the sense of prime; as, the primal curse. Primordial is first in an order of succession or development; as, a primordial leaf. Primitive frequently signifies having the original characteristics of that which it represents, as well as standing first in time; as, the primitive church. Primitive also very frequently signifies having the original or early characteristics without remoteness in time. Primeval simplicity is the simplicity of the earliest ages; primitive simplicity may be found in retired villages now. Pristine is an elegant word, used almost exclusively in a good sense of that which is original and perhaps ancient; as, pristine purity, innocence, vigor. That which is both an original and natural product of a soil or country is said to be indigenous. Immemorial refers solely to time, independently of quality, denoting, in legal phrase, that "whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary"; as, an immemorial custom. prof'it, n. 1. Any accession of good—physical, mental, or moral—from labor or exertion; benefit; return. 2. Excess of returns over outlay or expenditure. [F., < L. profectus, pp. of proficio; see PROFICIENT.]

Syn.: advantage, avail, benefit, emolument, expediency, gain, good, improvement, proceeds, receipts, return, returns, service, utility, value. The returns or receipts include all that is received from an outlay or investment; the profit is the excess (if any) of the receipts over the outlay; hence, in government, morals, etc., the profit is what is really good, helpful, useful, valuable. Utility is chiefly used in the sense of some immediate or personal and generally some material good. Advantage is that which gives one a vantage-ground, either for coping with competitors or with difficulties, needs, or demands; as, to have the advantage of a good education; it is frequently used of what one has beyond another or secures at the expense of another; as, to have the advantage of another in argument, or to take advantage of another in a bargain. Gain is what one secures beyond what he previously possessed. Benefit is anything that does one good. Emolument is profit, return, or value accruing through official position. Expediency has respect to profit or advantage, real or supposed, considered apart from or perhaps in opposition to right, in actions having a moral character. See UTILITY.—Ant.: damage, detriment, disadvantage, harm, hurt, injury, loss, ruin, waste.—Prep.: the profit of labor; on capital; in business.

pro'gramme, } ing the exercises, as for an entertainment; also, the selections, etc., so announced. 2. Any prearranged plan or course of proceedings; a prospectus. 3. A preface, or prefatory statement. [< Gr.F pro, before, + graphō, write.]

pro-gress'†, 1 pro-gres'; 2 pro-ğrĕs', vt. & vi. To move forward; continue onward in course of action or development; grow; gain; advance; improve. [< L. pro, forward, + gradior, go.]

prog'ress, 1 preg'res; 2 prŏğ'rĕs, n. 1. A moving forward in space. 2. Advancement toward maturity or completion, or toward a better state; increase; development; improvement. 3. A journey of state, as of a monarch over his realm.

Syn.: advance, advancement, attainment, development, growth, improvement, increase, proficiency, progression. Attainment, development, and proficiency are more absolute than the other words of the group, denoting some point of advantage or of comparative perfection reached by forward or onward movement; we speak of attainments in virtue or scholarship, proficiency in music or languages, the development of new powers or organs; proficiency includes the idea of skill. Advance may denote either a forward movement or the point gained by forward movement, but always relatively with reference to the point from which the movement started; as, this is a great advance. Advance admits the possibility of retreat; progress (Latin progredor, to walk forward) is steady and constant forward movement, admitting of pause, but not of retreat; advance suggests more clearly a point to be reached, while progress lays the emphasis upon the forward movement, which progression especially emphasizes. Progress is more frequently used of abstractions; as, the progress of ideas. In a thing good in itself all advance or progress is improvement; there is a growing tendency to restrict the words to this favorable sense, using increase indifferently of good or evil; one may say without limitation "I am an advocate of progress." Compare ATTAIN.—Ant.: check, decline, delay, falling back, falling off, relapse, retrogression, stay, stop, stoppage.—Phr.: the progress of truth; in virtue; toward perfection; from a lower to a higher state.—pro-gres'sion, n. 1. The act of progressing; advancement. 2. Math. A series of numbers or quantities each of which is derived from the preceding by a constant law. Syn.: see PROGRESS.—pro-gres'sion-al, a. Pertaining to progression.—pro-gres'siv(es, a. 1. Characterized by, making, or tending to make progress. 2. Aiming at or encouraging progress. 3. Pathol. Spreading from one part to others. Polit.*), a political party favoring the initiative, referendum, and recall, formed under the leadership of Theodore Roosevelt in 1912.—pro-gres'siv(e-lys, adv.—pro-gres'siv(e-nesss, n.

pro-hib'itd, 1 pro-hib'ıt; 2 pro-hĭb'it, vt. 1. To forbid, especially by authority or legal enactment; interdict. 2. To debar; preclude. [< L. pro, before, + habeo, hold.]

Syn.: debar, disallow, forbid, hinder, inhibit, interdict, preclude, prevent. Debar is said of persons, disallow of acts; one is debarred from anything when shut off as by some irresistible authority or necessity; one is prohibited from an act in express terms; he may be debarred by silent necessity. An act is disallowed by the authority that might have allowed it; the word is especially applied to acts which are done before they are pronounced upon; thus, a government may disallow the act of its commander in the field or its admiral on the high seas. Inhibit and interdict are chiefly known by their ecclesiastical use. As between forbid and prohibit, forbid is less formal and more personal, prohibit more official and judicial, with the implication of readiness to use such force as may be needed to give effect to the enactment; a parent forbids a child to take part in some game or to associate with certain companions; the slave-trade is now prohibited by the leading nations of the world. Many things are prohibited by law which can not be wholly prevented, as gambling and prostitution; on the other hand, things may be prevented which are not prohibited, as the services of religion, the payment of debts, or military conquest. Compare ABOLISH; HINDER; PREVENT; SHUT.—Ant.: allow, authorize, command, consent to, direct, empower, enjoin, give consent, leave, or permission; let, license, order, permit, put up with, require, sanction, suffer, tolerate, warrant.—Prep.: an act is prohibited by law; a person is prohibited by law from doing a certain act. Prohibit was formerly construed, as forbid still is, with the infinitive, but the construction with from and the verbal noun has now entirely superseded the older usage.

proj'ect, 1 proj'ekt; 2 prŏj'ĕct, n. Something projected or mapped out in the mind, as a course of action; a plan.

Syn.: contrivance, design, device, invention, plan, purpose, scheme. A plan is something drawn out on a flat surface, as the ground-plan of a house. A project is a thing thrown forth or out, and hence is something tentative, crude, experimental. A scheme is something only pictured in the mind—airy, visionary. Contrivance is the finding how to do something, especially how to get over or around a difficulty; device has much the same meaning, especially in mechanical art, but in other uses with more suggestion of trick or subterfuge. Invention is the coming to a method or process that has been sought by study and endeavor, and is a nobler and more complete word than contrivance. See DESIGN; PURPOSE.—Ant.: accomplishment, achievement, act, deed, doing, execution, performance, production, work.—Prep.: the project of or a project for a flying-machine.

pro-lapse', 1 pro-laps'; 2 pro-lăps', vi. To fall down or out. [< L. prolapsus, pp. of prolabor, < pro, forward, + labor, fall.]—pro-lap'sus, n. Pathol. The falling down of an organ from its normal position. [L.]

To preach; expound; exhort; also, to reveal; declare.

Syn.: augur, divine, foretell, predict, prognosticate. Prophesy differs from predict by assuming a claim to supernatural or divine inspiration. To prognosticate is to predict from observed signs, indications, or conditions. To prophesy in the Scriptural sense is to utter religious truth under divine inspiration, not necessarily to foretell future events, but to warn, exhort, comfort, etc., by special impulse from God. See AUGUR.—Ant.: chronicle, recall, recite, recollect, record, remember.—Prep.: prophesy of famine; oftener absolute, to prophesy famine, disaster, etc.—proph'e-si"er, n.

pro-pi"ti-a'tion, 1 pro-pish"ɪ-ē'shən; 2 pro-pish"i-ā'shon, n. 1. The act of propitiating. 2. That which propitiates.

Syn.: atonement, expiation, reconciliation, satisfaction. Atonement (at-one-ment), originally denoting reconciliation, or the bringing into agreement of those who have been estranged, is now chiefly used, as in theology, in the sense of some offering, sacrifice, or suffering sufficient to win forgiveness or make up for an offense. Expiation is the enduring of the full penalty of a wrong or crime. Propitiation is an offering, act on, or sacrifice that makes the governing power propitious toward the offender. Satisfaction denotes the rendering a full legal equivalent for the wrong done. Propitiation appeases the lawgiver; satisfaction meets the requirements of the law.—Ant.: alienation, condemnation, estrangement, offense, penalty, punishment, reprobation.

pro-pi'tious, 1 pro-pish'us; 2 pro-pish'ŭs, a. 1. Kindly disposed; gracious. 2. Attended by favorable circumstances; auspicious. [< L. propitius, favorable.] -ly, adv. -ness, n.

Syn.: auspicious, benign, benignant, clement, favorable, friendly, gracious, kind, kindly, merciful. That which is auspicious is of favorable omen; that which is propitious is of favoring influence or tendency; as, an auspicious morning; a propitious breeze. Propitious applies to persons, implying kind disposition and favorable inclinations, especially toward the suppliant; auspicious is not used of persons. See AUSPICIOUS.—Ant.: adverse, antagonistic, forbidding, harsh, hostile, ill-disposed, inauspicious, repellent, unfavorable, unfriendly, unpropitious.

pro-po'sal, 1 pro-pō'zəl; 2 pro-pō'şal, n. An offer proposing something to be accepted or adopted, especially one made in words; specif., an offer of marriage; also, that which is proposed.

Syn.: bid, offer, overture, proposition. An offer or proposal puts something before one for acceptance or rejection, proposal being the more formal word; a proposition sets forth truth (or what is claimed to be truth) in formal statement. The proposition is for consideration, the proposal for action; as, a proposition in geometry, a proposal of marriage; but proposition is often used nearly in the sense of proposal when it is a matter for deliberation; as, a proposition for the surrender of a fort. A bid is commercial and often verbal; as, a bid at an auction. An overture opens negotiation or conference, and the word is especially used of some movement toward reconciliation; as, overtures of peace. Syn.: see DESIGN.—Ant.: acceptance, decision, denial, refusal, rejection, repulse.

pro-pose', 1 pro-pōz'; 2 pro-pōz', v. [-POSED'; -POS'ING,] I. t. 1. To offer for acceptance or consideration, as a plan or scheme; present, as a candidate; put forward, as a topic for discussion. 2. To have in mind as a design or determination; purpose; intend. II. i. 1. To plan; make or announce a design. 2. To make an offer, as of marriage. [< F. proposer, < pro-, forth, + poser, put.]

Syn.: purpose. In its most frequent use, propose differs from purpose in that what we purpose lies in our own mind as a decisive act of will, a determination; what we propose is offered or stated to others. In this use of the word, what we propose is open to deliberation, as what we purpose is not. In another use of the word one proposes something to or by himself which may or may not be stated to others. In this latter sense propose is nearly identical with purpose, and the two words have often been used interchangeably. But in the majority of cases what we purpose is more general, what we propose more formal and definite; I purpose to do right; I propose to do this specific thing because it is right. In the historic sentence "I propose to move immediately on your works," purpose would not have the same sharp directness. See PLAN; PURPOSE.—pro-pos'er, n. One who proposes; formerly, an orator; speaker.—prop"o-si'tion, n. 1 Something proposed for acceptance or consideration; also, the act of proposing. 2. Gram. The statement of a judgment in words, including a subject and a predicate. 3. Math. A statement of a truth to be demonstrated (a theorem) or of an operation to be performed (a problem); loosely, the statement together with its demonstration. 4‖. An article of a creed. [< L. pro, forward. + traho, draw.]

Syn.: continue, delay, draw out, elongate, extend, lengthen, prolong. To protract is to cause to occupy a longer time than is usual, expected, or desirable. We protract a negotiation which we are slow to conclude; delay may be used either of the beginning or of any stage in the proceedings; we may delay a person as well as an action, but protract is not used of persons. Elongate is not used of actions or abstractions, but only of material objects or extension in space; protract is rarely, except in mathematics, used of concrete objects or extension in space; we elongate a line, protract a discussion. Protract has usually an unfavorable sense, implying that the matter referred to is already unduly long, or would be so if longer continued; continue is neutral, applying equally to the desirable or the undesirable. Compare HINDER.—Ant.: abbreviate, abridge, conclude, contract, curtail, hasten, hurry, limit, reduce, shorten.

—pro-tract'ed, pa. Unduly or unusually extended or prolonged.—protracted meeting [U. S.], a series of religious or revival meetings.—pro-tract'er, n. 1. One who or that which protracts. 2. A protractor.—pro-trac'tion, n. —pro-trac'tive(e§, a.—pro-trac'tor, n. 1. An instrument for measuring and laying off angles; also, a tailors' adjustable pattern. 2. Anat. A muscle that extends a limb or moves it forward. 3. Surg. Formerly, an instrument for extracting foreign bodies from a wound. 4. Same as PROTRACTER, 1.

prov'erb, 1 prev'ərb; 2 prŏv'erb, n. 1. A brief, pithy saying. 2. An enigmatical saying. Num. xxi, 27. 3. Something proverbial; a typical example; byword. [< L. pro, forth, + verbum, word.]

Syn.: adage, aphorism, apothegm, axiom, byword, dictum, maxim, motto, precept, saw, saying, truism. The proverb or adage gives homely truth in condensed, practical form, the adage often pictorial. "Hope deferred maketh the heart sick" is a proverb; "The cat loves fish, but dares not wet her feet," is an adage. Both the proverb and the adage, but especially he latter, are thought of as ancient and widely known. An aphorism partakes of the character of a definition; it is a summary statement of what the author sees and believes to be true. An apothegm is a terse statement of what is plain or easily proved. The aphorism is philosophical, the apothegm practical. A dictum is a statement of some person or school, on whom it depends for authority; as, a dictum of Aristotle. A saying is impersonal, current among the common people; deriving its authority from its manifest truth or good sense, as, it is an old saying, "the more haste, the worse speed." A saw is a saying that is old, but somewhat worn and tiresome. Precept is a command to duty; motto or maxim is a brief statement of cherished truth, the maxim being more uniformly and directly practical; "God is love" may be a motto, "Fear God and fear naught," a maxim. The precepts of the Sermon on the Mount will furnish the Christian with invaluable maxims or mottoes. A byword is a saying used reproachfully or contemptuously. Compare ADAGE; AXIOM.

[< OF. purchaster, < pur-, forth, + chacter, pursue.]

Syn.: acquire, bargain for, barter for, buy, get, obtain, procure, secure. Buy and purchase are close synonyms, in numerous cases freely interchangeable, but with the difference usually found between words of Anglo-Saxon and those of French or Latin origin. The Anglo-Saxon buy is used for all the homely and petty concerns of common life, the French purchase is often restricted to transactions of more dignity; yet the Anglo-Saxon word buy is commonly more emphatic, and in the higher ranges of thought appeals more strongly to the feelings. One may either buy or purchase fame, favor, honor, pleasure, etc., but when our feelings are stirred we speak of victory or freedom as dearly bought. "Buy the truth, and sell it not" (Prov. xxiii, 23) would be greatly weakened by the rendering "Purchase the truth, and do not dispose of it." Compare BUSINESS; GET; PRICE; SALE.—Ant.: barter, dispose of, exchange, put to sale, sell.—Prep.: purchase at a price; at a public sale; of or from a person; for cash; with money; on time.

queer, 1 kwīr; 2 kwēr, vt. [Slang.] To jeopardize a transaction or spoil a chance.

queer, 1 kwīr; 2 kwēr, a. 1. Being out of the usual course of events in minor respects; singular; odd. 2. Of questionable character; open to suspicion. 3. [Slang.] Counterfeit. [< LG. queer, oblique, < G. quer.]

Syn.: anomalous, bizarre, crotchety, curious, droll, eccentric, erratic, fantastic, funny, grotesque, laughable, ludicrous, odd, peculiar, quaint, ridiculous, singular, strange, unique, unmatched, unusual, whimsical. Odd is unmated, as an odd shoe, and so uneven, as an odd number. Singular is alone of its kind; as, the singular number. What is singular is odd, but what is odd may not be singular; as, a drawerful of odd gloves. A strange thing is something hitherto unknown in fact or in cause. A singular coincidence is one the happening of which is unusual; a strange coincidence is one the cause of which is hard to explain. That which is peculiar belongs especially to a person as his own; as, Israel was called Jehovah's "peculiar people," i. e., especially chosen and cherished by him; in its ordinary use there is the implication that the thing peculiar to one is not common to the majority, tho it may be shared by many; as, the Shakers are peculiar. Eccentric is off or aside from the center, and so off or aside from the ordinary and what is considered the normal course; as, genius is commonly eccentric. Eccentric is a higher and more respectful word than odd or queer. Erratic signifies wandering, a stronger and more censorious term than eccentric. Queer is transverse or oblique, aside from the common in a way that is comical or perhaps slightly ridiculous. Queer is also used for that which is oddly mysterious; as, a queer proceeding or proposal. Quaint denotes that which is pleasingly odd and fanciful, often with something of the antique; as, the quaint architecture of medieval towns. That which is funny is calculated to provoke laughter; that which is droll is more quietly amusing. That which is grotesque in the material sense is irregular or misshapen in form or outline or ill-proportioned so as to be somewhat ridiculous; the French bizarre is practically equivalent to grotesque. See ODD.—Ant.: common, customary, familiar, natural, normal, ordinary, regular, usual. - Queer Street [Slang, ques'tion, 1 kwes'chən; 2 kwĕs'chon, v. I. t. 1. To put a question or questions to. 2. To treat as doubtful; call in question; also, to make objection to; challenge. 3†. To make inquiry about; ask after. II. i. 1. To make inquiry. 2. To entertain or express doubt. [F., < L. quæstio(n-), < quæro, seek.]

Syn.: ask, challenge, dispute, doubt, inquire, interrogate, investigate, query, quiz. To ask is to seek information, favor, or aid; inquire, question, interrogate, respect only the obtaining of information. To interrogate is to examine formally or officially, commonly by a series of questions. Question comes close to the meaning of interrogate, the less formal; one may question a messenger at the door regarding the source of a message, the time of sending, etc. To question a person always implies a set determination to elicit truth, commonly by repeated and varied questions; the old-time examination by torture was called "the question." One may inquire casually and indifferently; he questions intently and resolutely. As applied to things, question has nearly the meaning of challenge; as, "I question the truth of that statement—the value of that article," or the like. To question a person implies some kind or claim of authority; one may answer, "By what right do you question me?" See INQUIRE. Compare ASK, v.; QUESTION, n.—ques'tion-a-bl(e[P], a. Liable to be called in question; debatable; also, dubious; suspicious. Syn.: see EQUIVOCAL.—ques'tion-er, n.—ques'tion-ing, pa. & n. -ly, adv.

ques'tion, n. 1. An interrogative sentence calling for an answer; an inquiry. 2. A subject of inquiry or debate; a matter to be decided. 3. A subject of dispute; a controversy; difference; as, a question arose about it. 4. A proposition under discussion in a deliberative assembly. 5. Objection raised or entertained; doubt. 6. Interrogation. 7†. Judicial examination; trial; also, examination by torture. 8†. Talk; conversation.

Syn.: doubt, inquiry, inquisition interrogation, interrogatory, investigation, query. An inquiry seeks information for the benefit of the inquirer; a question may do the same, or may have the intent to perplex, confuse, or entrap the one of whom it is asked; one makes inquiry as to his way; we speak of idle or frivolous questions, rather than of idle or frivolous inquiries. A query is a question more or less vaguely formulated and indefinite in purpose, often amounting to no more than a suspense of judgment and a suggestion of future consideration; as, a proof-reader's query, which is often but an interrogation-point in the margin; a doubt may be termed a silent question, as a question is in many cases simply an expressed doubt. An interrogation or interrogatory is a formal inquiry. Interrogatory has a special legal use, denoting an inquiry in writing by order of a court, to be answered under oath. An investigation is an elaborate search for truth or fact, not only by questions, but by every other means of procuring information; an inquisition is an investigation which is either unwarranted, unduly minute, or in some other way offensive. See DOUBT; INQUIRY; TOPIC. —ques'tion-less, a.—ques'tion-less-ly, adv.

Syn.: accelerate, advance, dispatch, drive, drive on, expedite, facilitate, further, hasten, hurry, make haste, press forward, promote, speed, urge, urge on. To quicken, in the sense here considered, is to increase speed, move or cause to move more rapidly, as through more space or with a greater number of motions in the same time. To accelerate is to increase the speed of action or of motion. A motion whose speed increases upon itself is said to be accelerated, as the motion of a falling body, which becomes swifter with every second of time. To accelerate any work is to hasten it toward a finish, commonly by quickening all its operations in orderly unity toward the result. To dispatch is to do and be done with, to get a thing off one's hands. To dispatch an enemy is to kill him outright and quickly; to dispatch a messenger is to send him in haste; to dispatch a business is to bring it quickly to an end. Dispatch is commonly used of single items. To promote a cause is in any way to bring it forward, advance it in power, prominence, etc. To speed is really to secure swiftness; to hasten is to attempt it, whether successfully or unsuccessfully. Hurry always indicates something of confusion. The hurried man forgets dignity, appearance, comfort, courtesy, everything but speed; he may forget something vital to the matter in hand; yet, because reckless haste may attain the great object of speed, hurry has come to be the colloquial and popular word for acting quickly. To facilitate is to quicken by making easy; to expedite is to quicken by removing hindrances.—Ant.: check, clog, delay, drag, hinder, impede, obstruct, retard.—quick'en-er, n.—quick'-grass", n. Same as COUCH-GRASS.—quick'lime", n. Unslaked lime.—quick'ly, adv. In a quick manner.—q.-march, a march having about 108 steps to the minute.—q.-match, n. A match-wick, as of threads of cotton rubbed with mealed powder, that burns quickly, for firing cannon, fireworks, etc.—quick'ness, n.—quick'sand", n. A bed of sand so water-soaked as readily to engulf any person or animal that attempts to rest upon it.—quick'set". I. vt. To fence with living plants; plant with hawthorn. II. a.

To observe; note; write down. [< LL.[or] quoto, divide into chapters. < L. quotus; see QUOTA.]

Syn.: cite, excerpt, extract, paraphrase, plagiarize, recite, repeat. To quote is to give an author's words, either exactly, as in direct quotation, or in substance, as in indirect quotation; to cite is, etymologically, to call up a passage, as a witness is summoned. In citing a passage its exact location by chapter, page, or otherwise must be given, so that it can be promptly called into evidence; in quoting, the location may or may not be given, but the words or substance of the passage must be given. In citing, neither the author's words nor his thought may be given, but simply the reference to the location where they may be found; to quote, in the proper sense, is to give credit to the author quoted. To paraphrase is to state an author's thought more freely than in indirect quotation, keeping the substance of his thought and his order of statement, but changing the language and style, and perhaps expanding by explanation, inference, etc. To plagiarize is to quote without credit, appropriating another's words or thought as one's own. To recite or repeat is usually to quote orally, tho recite is applied in legal phrase to a particular statement of facts which is not a quotation; a kindred use obtains in ordinary speech; as, to recite one's misfortunes.

To converse; take or give account; talk. Syn.: see ARGUE; DISPUTE.—rea'son-er, n.—rea'son-ing, n. The act or process of the mind by which from propositions known or assumed new propositions are reached; argumentation; also, the reasons, proofs, or arguments employed in such process.

Syn.: argument, argumentation, debate, ratiocination. Argumentation and debate always suppose two parties alleging reasons for and against a proposition; the same idea appears figuratively when we speak of a debate or an argument with oneself, as a debate between reason and conscience. Reasoning may be the act of one alone, as it is simply the orderly setting forth of reasons, whether for the instruction of inquirers, the confuting of opponents, or the clear establishment of truth for oneself. Reasoning may be either deductive or inductive. Argument or argumentation was formerly used of deductive reasoning only. With the rise of the inductive philosophy these words have come to be applied to inductive processes also; but while -easoning may be informal or even, as far as tracing its processes is concerned, unconscious, argument and argumentation strictly imply logical form. Compare INTELLECT; REASON.

rea'son, n. 1. That which is thought or alleged as the basis or ground for any opinion, determination, or action; something adduced or adapted to influence the mind in determining or acting; proof; argument; motive; principle. 2. That which explains or accounts for any fact, act, proceeding, or event; loosely, an efficient or final cause, or a condition. 3. The entire mental or rational nature of man, as distinguished from the intelligence of the brute; the mind; in a more limited sense, the purely intellectual faculties. 4. Specifically, the normal exercise of the rational faculties. 5. That which is in conformity to general opinion; common sense; as, the anarchist was brought to reason. 6. Logic. A logical ground for thinking; an antecedent; also, the premise or premises of an argument: generally the minor premise. 7. That which is right or befitting; just procedure; a reasonable act or proposition. 8. Psychol. Intuition. [OF., < L. ratio, reckoning, reason.]

Syn.: account, aim, argument, cause, consideration, design, end, ground, motive, object, principle, purpose. While the cause of any event, act, or fact, as commonly understood, is the power that makes it to be, the reason of or for it is the explanation given by the human mind; but reason is, in popular language, often used as equivalent to cause, especially in the sense of final cause. In the statement of any reasoning, the argument may be an entire syllogism, or the premises considered together apart from the conclusion, or in logical strictness the middle term only by which the particular conclusion is connected with the general statement. But when the reasoning is not in strict logical form, the middle term following the conclusion is called the reason; thus in the statement "All tyrants deserve death; Cæsar was a tyrant; therefore Cæsar deserved death," "Cæsar was a tyrant" would in the strictest sense be called the argument; but if we say "Cæsar deserved death because he was a tyrant," the latter clause would be termed the reason. See CAUSE; INTELLECT; MIND; MOTIVE; REASONING; UNDERSTANDING; WISDOM. Compare BECAUSE.—PREP.: the reason of a thing that is to be explained; the reason for a thing that is to be done.—by reason, or by reason of, on account of. —Goddess of Reason, an imaginary divinity set up by the atheistic revolutionists of France.—to do r.†. 1. To render content. 2. To pledge in drinking.—rea'son-a-bl(eness, n. 1. Conformable to reason; sensible. 2. Having the faculty of reason; rational. 3. Governed by reason in acting or thinking. 4. Moderate, as in price; fair. re-cant'[d], 1 rī-kant'; 2 re-cănt', vt. & vi. To withdraw or retract, as a declaration or opinion; renounce. [< L.[or] re-, again, + canto, sing.]

Syn.: abandon, abjure, deny, disavow, discard, disclaim, disown, forswear, recall, renounce, repudiate, retract, revoke. To recant is to deny formally and publicly some opinion or statement, especially in religion, that one has held or advocated. Abjure (L. ab, away, and juro, swear) is etymologically the exact equivalent of the Saxon forswear, signifying to put away formally and under oath, as an error, heresy, or evil practise, or a condemned and detested person. A man recants his belief, abjures or renounces his allegiance, repudiates another's claim, renounces his own, retracts a false statement. A person may deny, disavow, disclaim, disown what has been truly or falsely imputed to him or supposed to be his. He may deny his signature, disavow the act of his agent, disown his child; he may repudiate either a just claim or a base suggestion. Compare ABANDON; RENOUNCE.—Ant.: acknowledge, advocate, assert, cherish, claim, defend, hold, maintain, own, proclaim, retain, uphold, vindicate.—re"can-ta'tion, n.—re-cant'er, n.

[F.,< L. religiō(-nem); connected with relegere, to read over, or with religare, to bind.]

Syn.: devotion, faith, godliness, holiness, morality, pietism, piety, theology, worship. Piety is primarily filial duty, as of children to parents, and hence, in its purest sense, a loving obedience and service to God as the Heavenly Father; pietism often denotes a mystical, sometimes an affected piety; religion is the reverent acknowledgment both in heart and in act of a divine being. Religion includes worship whether it be external and formal, or the adoring reverence of the human spirit for the divine, seeking outward expression. Devotion, which in its fullest sense is self-consecration, is often used to denote an act of worship, especially prayer or adoration; as, he is engaged in his devotions. Morality is the system and practise of duty as required by the moral law, consisting chiefly in outward acts, and thus may be observed without spiritual rectitude of heart; morality is of necessity included in all true religion, which involves both outward act and spiritual service. Godliness (primarily godlikeness) is a character and spirit like that of God. Holiness is the highest, sinless perfection of any spirit, whether divine or human, tho often used for purity or for consecration. Theology is the science of religion, or the study and scientific statement of its doctrines. Faith, strictly the belief and trust which the soul exercises toward God, or a firm reliance on the truth of religious doctrines, is often used as a comprehensive word for a whole system of religion considered as the object of faith; as, the Christian faith; the Mohammedan faith.—Ant.: atheism, blasphemy, godlessness, impiety, infidelity, irreligion profanity, sacrilege, unbelief, ungodliness.—re-lig'ion-ism, n. The practise of or adherence to religion: used derogatorily.—re-lig'-ion-ist, n. One devoted to the services and duties of religion: a zealot.—re-lig'ious, a. 1. Feeling and manifesting religion; devout. 2. Of or pertaining to religion. 3. Having thorough and genuine fidelity; conscientious. 4. *R. (2) A print from an engraved or etched plate bearing a remark. re-marque'†. [< F. re-, again, + marquer, mark.]

Syn.: annotation, comment, note, observation, utterance. A comment is an explanatory or critical remark, as upon some passage in a literary work or some act or speech in common life. A note is something to call attention, hence a brief written statement; in correspondence, a note is briefer than a letter. A note upon some passage in a book is briefer and less elaborate than a comment. Annotations are especially brief notes, commonly marginal, and closely following the text. Comments, observations, or remarks may be oral or written, comments being oftenest written, and remarks oftenest oral. An observation is properly the result of fixed attention and reflection; a remark may be the suggestion of the instant. Remarks are more informal than a speech.—re-mark'a-bl(eF, a. Worthy of special notice; conspicuous; distinguished. Syn.: break, burst, cleave, lacerate, mangle, rip, rive, rupture, sever, slit, sunder, tear. Rend and tear are applied usually to the sundering of textile substances (rend also to frangible), tear being the milder, rend the stronger word. To rip, as usually applied to garments or other articles made by sewing or stitching, is to divide along the line of a seam by cutting or breaking the stitches; the other senses bear some resemblance or analogy to this; as, to rip open a wound. Rive is a wood-workers' word for parting wood in the way of the grain without a clean cut. To lacerate is to tear roughly the flesh or animal tissue, as by the teeth of a wild beast; a lacerated wound is distinguished from a wound made by a clean cut or incision. Mangle is a stronger word than lacerate; lacerate is more superficial, mangle more complete. To burst or rupture is to tear or rend by force from within, burst denoting the greater violence; as, to burst a gun; to rupture a blood-vessel; a steam-boiler may be ruptured without explosion. Compare BREAK; HOLE.—Ant.: heal, join, mend, reunite, secure, stitch, unite, weld.—rend'er, n.

Syn.: abandon, abjure, deny, disavow, discard, disclaim, disown, forswear, recall, recant, refuse, reject, repudiate, retract, revoke. Abjure, discard, forswear, recall, recant, renounce, retract, and revoke, like abandon, imply some previous connection. Renounce (L. re, back, and nuntio, bear a message) is to declare against and give up formally and definitively; as, to renounce the pomps and vanities of the world. Retract (L. re, back, and traho, draw) is to take back something that one has said as not true or as what one is not ready to maintain; as, to retract a charge or accusation; one recants what was especially his own, he retracts what was directed against another. Repudiate (L. re, back, or away, and pudeo, feel shame) is primarily to renounce as shameful, hence to divorce, as a wife; thus in general to put away with emphatic and determined repulsion; as, to repudiate a debt. To deny is to affirm to be not true or not binding; as, to deny a statement or a relationship; or to refuse to grant as something requested; as, his mother could not deny him what he desired. To discard is to cast away as useless or worthless; thus, one discards a worn garment; a coquette discards a lover. Revoke (L. re, back, and voco, call), etymologically the exact equivalent of the English recall, is to take back something given or granted; as, to revoke a command, a will, or a grant; recall may be used in the exact sense of revoke, but is often applied to persons, as revoke is not; we recall a messenger and revoke an order. Compare ABANDON; ABDICATE; ABJURE; RECANT.— Ant.: acknowledge, advocate, assert, avow, cherish, claim, defend, hold, maintain, own, proclaim, retain, uphold, vindicate.—re-nounce'ment, n.—re-nounc'er, n.

re-pen'tance, n. A turning with sorrow from a past sinful course or action; looscly, regret.

Syn.: compunction, contrition, penitence, regret, remorse, sorrow. Regret is sorrow for any painful or annoying matter. One is moved with penitence for wrong-doing. To speak of regret for a fault of our own marks it as slighter than one for which we should express penitence. Repentance is sorrow for sin with self-condemnation, and complete turning from the sin. Penitence is transient, and may involve no change of character or conduct. There may be sorrow without repentance, as for consequences only, but not repentance without sorrow. Compunction is a momentary sting of conscience, in view either of a past or of a contemplated act. Contrition is a subduing sorrow for sin, as against the divine holiness and love. Remorse is, as its derivation indicates, a biting or gnawing back of guilt upon the heart, with no suggestion of divine forgiveness.—Ant.: approval, comfort, complacency, content, ease of conscience, hardness, impenitence, obduracy, obstinacy, recusancy, self-approval, self-complacency, self-congratulation, stubbornness.—Prep.: repentance of or in heart, or from the heart; repentance for sins; repentance before or toward God; repentance unto life.

S.] To appear at a given place or before one and announce oneself. [< L.^{F} reporto, < re-, again, + porto, carry.] Syn.: see ANNOUNCE; RELATE.—re-port'er, n. 1. A bearer of news; one employed by a newspaper to gather and report news for publication. 2. One who edits reports of important cases in court for official publication.—re-port'ing, n.—re-port'ing-ly‡, adv.

re-port', n. 1. That which is reported; an announcement. 2. A published narration; official statement. 3. An explosive sound; a sudden loud noise.
Syn.: account, description, narration, narrative, recital, record, rehearsal, relation, rumor, statement, story, tale. Account, primarily a commercial summary, carries a similar meaning in the derived sense; an account of an occurrence is circumstantial, and, in its ideal, adequate, complete, and unembellished; we speak of a clear, a full, or a partial account; a glowing account is still supposed to be circumstantially as well as substantially correct. A statement is definite, confined to essentials and properly to matters within the personal knowledge of the one who states them; as, an ante-mortem statement. A narrative is a somewhat extended and embellished account of events in order of time, ordinarily with a view to please or entertain. A description gives especial scope to the pictorial element. A report, as its etymology implies, is supposed or intended to bring back the past, and may be concise and formal or highly descriptive and dramatic. Compare ALLEGORY; ANECDOTE; HISTORY; NEWS; RECORD.

re-pose', 1 rı-pōz'; 2 re-pōs'. I. vt. & vi. [RE-POSED'; RE-POS'ING.] 1. To lay down in a posture of rest; refresh by rest: often reflexively. 2. To place or base, as confidence or hope; trust; confide: with in. 3. To lie or rest on a support; recline: with on or upon; hence, to take rest; sleep. re-proof', n. 1. The act of reproving; blame; censure. 2†. Refutation; disproof. 3†. Ignominy; reproach.

Syn.: admonition, animadversion, blame, censure, check, chiding, comment, condemnation, criticism, denunciation, disapproval, objurgation, rebuke, reflection, reprehension, reprimand, reproach, reproval, upbraiding. Blame, censure, and disapproval may either be felt or uttered; comment, criticism, rebuke, reflection, reprehension, and reproof are always expressed. The same is true of admonition and animadversion. Comment and criticism may be favorable as well as censorious; they imply no superiority or authority on the part of him who utters them; nor do reflection or reprehension, which are simply turning the mind back upon what is disapproved. Reprehension is supposed to be calm and just, and with good intent; reflection is often from mere ill feeling, and is likely to be more personal and less impartial than reprehension; we often speak of unkind or unjust reflections. Rebuke, literally a stopping of the mouth, is administered to a forward or hasty person; reproof is administered to one intentionally or deliberately wrong; both words imply authority in the reprover, and direct expression of disapproval to the face of the person rebuked or reproved. Reprimand is official censure formally administered by a superior to one under his command. Animadversion is censure of a high, authoritative, and somewhat formal kind. Rebuke may be given at the outset, or in the midst of an action; animadversion, reflection, reprehension, reproof, always follow the act; admonition is anticipatory, and meant to be preventive. Check is allied to rebuke, and given before or during action; chiding is nearer to reproof, but with more of personal bitterness and less of authority. Compare CONDEMN; REPROVE.—Ant.: applause, approbation, approval, commendation, encomium, eulogy, panegyric, praise. re-prov'al‡.

re-prove', 1 rı-prūv'; 2 re-prọv', vt. 1. To censure authoritatively, openly, and directly, as for a fault; rebuke. 2. To express disapproval of (an act). 3‖. To convince; convict. [< L.[F] reprobo, condemn.]

Syn.: admonish, blame, censure, chasten, check, chide, condemn, find fault with, rebuke, remonstrate with, reprehend, reprimand, reproach, upbraid. To censure is to pronounce an adverse judgment that may or may not be expressed to the person censured; to reprove is to censure authoritatively, openly, and directly to the face of the person reproved; to rebuke is to reprove with sharpness, and often with abruptness, usually in the midst of some action or course of action deemed censurable; to reprimand is to reprove officially; to blame is a familiar word signifying to pass censure upon, make answerable, as for a fault; blame and censure apply either to persons or acts; reprove and rebuke are applied chiefly, and reprimand exclusively, to persons. To reproach is to censure openly and vehemently, and with intense personal feeling as of grief or anger; as, to reproach one for ingratitude; reproach knows no distinction of rank or character; a subject may reproach a king or a criminal a judge. To expostulate or remonstrate with is to mingle reasoning and appeal with censure in the hope of winning one from his evil way, expostulate being the gentler, remonstrate the severer word. re-quite', 1 rɪ-kwaɪt'; 2 re-kwīt', vt. [RE-QUIT'ED[d]; RE-QUIT'ING.] 1. To repay either good or evil to (a person); recompense; retaliate upon; punish. 2. To repay good or evil for (an act); make return for. [< RE- + QUIT, v.]

Syn.: avenge, compensate, pay, punish, quit, reciprocate, recompense, remunerate, repay, retaliate, return, revenge, reward, satisfy, settle with. Requite is often used in the more general sense of recompense or repay, but always with the suggestion, at least, of the original idea of full equivalent; when one speaks of requiting kindness with ingratitude, the expression gains force from the comparison of the actual with the proper and appropriate return. To repay or to retaliate, to punish or to reward, may be to make some return very inadequate to the benefit or injury received or the right or wrong done; but to requite (according to its etymology) is to make such return as to quit oneself of all obligation of favor or hostility, of punishment or reward. See PAY.—Ant.: absolve, acquit, excuse, forget, forgive, neglect, overlook, pardon, slight.—Prep.: with.

—re-quit'a-bl(e[F], a.—re-qui'tal, n. The act of requiting, or that which requites; return for good or ill. Syn.: see RECOMPENSE; REVENGE.—re-quit'er, n.

re-splen'dent, 1 ri-splen'dent; 2 re-splĕn'dĕnt, a. Shining with brilliant luster; vividly bright; splendid; gorgeous. [< L. re-, again, + splendeo, shine.] Syn.: see BRIGHT. -ly, adv.—re-splen'dence, re-splen'den-cy, n. Splendor.

re-spond'[d], 1 ri-spond'; 2 re-spŏnd', v. I. t. 1. [U. S.] To satisfy by payment; answer, in any way. 2†. To correspond to. II. i. 1. To return an answer or answers; make reply. 2. To act in response or sympathy; be responsive. 3. Law. To make answer; reply; also, to be liable or answerable. 4. To correspond; suit. [< L.[OF] respondeo, < re-, again, + spondeo, promise.]—re-spon'dent. I. a. 1. Giving response, or given as a response; answering; responsive. 2. Correspondent. II. n. One who responds or answers; a defendant.—re-spond'er, n.

re-sponse', 1 ri-spons'; 2 re-spŏns', n. The act of responding, or that which is responded; an answer; reply. [< L. responsum, < responsus, pp. of respondeo; see RESPOND.] Syn.: answer, repartee, replication, reply, retort. A rejoinder is strictly an answer to a reply, tho often used in the general sense of answer, but always with the implication of something more or less controversial or opposed, tho lacking the conclusiveness implied in answer. A response is accordant or harmonious, designed or adapted to carry on the thought of the words that called it forth, as the responses in a liturgical service, or to meet the wish of him who seeks it; as, the appeal for aid met a prompt and hearty response. Repartee is a prompt, witty, and commonly good-natured answer to some argument or attack; a retort may also be witty, but is severe and may be even savage in its intensity. See ANSWER.

re-spon'si-bl(e[F], 1 ri-spen'si-bl; 2 re-spŏn'si-bl, a. 1. Answerable legally or morally for the discharge of a duty, trust, or debt. 2. Having capacity to perceive the distinctions of right and wrong. 3. Able to meet obligations. 4. Involving accountability or obligation. -ness, n.—re-spon"si-bil'i-ty, n. [-TIES[2], pl.] 1. The state of being responsible or accountable. 2. That for which one is answerable; a duty or trust. 3. Ability to meet obligations. re-spon'siv(e[S], a. 1. Inclined or ready to respond; being in accord, sympathy, or harmony; responding; correspondent. 2. Constituting or of the nature of response or reply. 3. Characterized by or containing responses. 4. Law. Constituting a relevant reply. 5†. Answerable; responsible. -ly, adv. -ness, n.

re-spon'so-ry, 1 ri-spen'so-ri; 2 re-spŏn'so-ry, a. Of or pertaining to response; containing answer; responsive.

rest[1d], 1 rest; 2 rĕst, v. I. t. 1. To cause to cease from labor or exertion; put at or allow to take rest: often used reflexively. 2. To place on a support, base, or basis; lean; lay; support; establish. II. i. 1. To cease from action, motion, or operation of any kind; desist from labor; pause; stop. 2. To repose; sleep; also, to be still in death. 3. To be free from excitement or disturbance; be quiet or still; be at peace. 4. To be supported or fixed; stand; lie; lean; recline; be founded, based, or established. 5. To rely with confidence; trust. 6. To remain fixed; abide. 7. To be content or submissive; acquiesce. 8. Law. To submit one's case.

Syn.: abide, acquiesce, be content, be quiet, be still, be tranquil, cease, desist, halt, hold, lean, lie, pause, recline, repose, sleep, slumber, stand, stay, stop, unbend. See ABIDE; LEAN. Compare synonyms for REST[1], n.—Ant.: be agitated, be disturbed, be weary, be worn, be worn out, contend, fight, labor, strive, struggle, toil, wake, watch, work.—Prep.: rest on or upon a couch; on one's arm; rest from toil; for a new endeavor; rest in peace: in the grave.

rest[2d], 1 rest; 2 rĕst, v. I. i. 1. To be and remain; continue; stay; as, rest content: now generally confused with REST[1]. 2†. To be left; as, nothing rests but hope. II†. t. To cause to be and remain; keep; as, God rest you well! [< L.[F] resto, remain, < re-, back, + sto, stand.]

rest[1], n. 1. The act or state of resting; cessation from labor, exertion, action, or motion of any kind; repose; quiet. 2. Freedom from disturbance or disquiet; peace; tranquillity. 3. Sleep; death. 4. That on which anything rests; a support; base; basis; foundation. 5. A place of repose or quiet; a stopping-place; abode. 6. Mus. (1) A pause, or an interval of silence. (2) A character indicating such pause; as, an eighth rest. 7. A pause in a verse; cesura. [< AS. rest, rest.]

Syn.: calm, calmness, cessation, ease, pause, peace, peacefulness, quiescence, quiet, quietness, quietude, recreation, repose, sleep, slumber, stay, stillness, stop, tranquillity. Ease denotes freedom from cause of disturbance, whether external or internal. Quiet denotes freedom from agitation, or especially from annoying sounds. Rest is a cessation of activity, especially of wearying or painful activity. Recreation is some pleasing activity of certain organs or faculties that affords rest to other parts of our nature that have become weary. Repose is a laying down, primarily of the body, and figuratively a similar freedom from toil or strain of mind. Repose is more complete than rest; a blacksmith finds a temporary rest while the iron is heating, but he does not yield to repose; in a pause of battle a soldier rests on his arms; the victor reposes on his laurels. Sleep is the perfection of repose, the most complete rest; slumber is a light and ordinarily pleasant form of sleep. In the figurative sense, rest of mind, soul, conscience, is not mere cessation of activity, but a pleasing, tranquil relief from all painful and wearying thought, feeling, or action; repose is even more deep, tranquil, and complete. See REMAINDER; RESPITE.—Ant.: agitation, commotion, disquiet, disturbance, excitement, motion, movement, restlessness, stir, strain, toil, tumult, unrest, work.

—rest'ful, a. Full of or giving rest. -ly, adv. -ness, n. —rest'less, a. Having no rest; uneasy; sleepless. Syn.: see ACTIVE; INATTENTIVE; RESTIVE. -ly, adv. -ness, n.

rest[2], n. 1. That which remains or is left over; a remainder. 2. Those remaining or not enumerated; the others: in this sense a collective noun taking a plural verb. 3. A balance, as of resources. [< F. reste, < rester, rest, < L. resto, < re-, back, + sto, stand.]

res'tau-rant, 1 res'to-rant; 2 rĕs'to-rant, n. A place where refreshments or meals are provided. [F.]—res"-tau"ra"teur', 1 res"to"ra"tūr'; 2 rĕs"to"rā"tūr', n. The proprietor or keeper of a restaurant.

res"ti-tu'tion, 1 res"ti-tū'shən; 2 rĕs"ti-tū'shon, n. 1. The act of restoring something that has been taken away or lost. 2. The act of making good or rendering an equivalent, as for injury or loss; indemnification. 3. Restoration to, return to, or recovery of a former position or condition. 4. Physics. The property of elastic bodies by which they tend to recover their shape after compression. [F., < L. re-, again, + statuo, set up.]

Syn.: amends, compensation, indemnification, indemnity, recompense, remuneration, reparation, repayment, restoration, return.—Ant.: cheat, cheating, defrauding, embezzlement, extortion, fraud, plunder, robbery, stealing, theft.

res'tiv(e[S], 1 res'tiv; 2 rĕs'tiv, a. 1. Impatient of control; unruly. 2. Restless; fidgety. 3‖. Stubborn; balky. [< F. restif, < rester, remain.]

Syn.: balky, fidgety, fractious, fretful, frisky, impatient, intractable, mulish, mutinous, obstinate, rebellious, recalcitrant, refractory, resentful, restless, skittish, stubborn, unruly, vicious. Balky, mulish, obstinate, and stubborn are synonyms of restive only in an infrequent if not obsolete use; the supposed sense of "tending to rest," "standing stubbornly still," is scarcely supported by any examples, and those cited to support that meaning often fail to do so. The disposition to offer active resistance to control by any means whatever is what is commonly indicated by restive in the best English speech and literature. Dryden speaks of "the pampered colt" as "restiff to the rein"; but the rein is not used to propel a horse forward, but to hold him in, and it is against this that he is "restiff." A horse may be made restless by flies or by martial music, but with no refractoriness; the restive animal impatiently resists or struggles to break from control, as by bolting, flinging his rider, or otherwise. With this the metaphorical use of the word agrees, which is always in the sense of such terms as impatient, intractable, rebellious, and the like; a people restive under despotism are not disposed to "rest" under it, but to resist it and fling it off.—Ant.: docile, gentle, manageable, obedient, peaceable, quiet, submissive, tractable, yielding. -ly, adv. -ness, n.

re-store'[1], 1 rĭ-stōr'; 2 re-stōr', vt. [RE-STORED'; RE-STOR'ING.] 1. To bring back to a former state, position, etc. 2. To reproduce as originally existing, as a building, a work of art, or an extinct animal. 3. To bring into existence or activity again; renew or reestablish after interruption. 4. To return, as that which has been lost, taken, or removed, or its equivalent. 5. To make restitution or amends for. [< OF. restorer, < L. restauro, restore.] Syn.: see RECLAIM; RECOVER.—res"to-ra'tion, n. The act of restoring, or that which is restored. 2. Hist. [R-] (1) The return of Charles II. to England in 1660, consequent upon the overthrow of the Cromwellian Protectorate, with the period following. (2) The return of the Jews to Palestine after the Babylonian captivity. Syn.: see RESTITUTION.—re-stor'a-tiv(e[S]. I. a. Tending or able to restore. re-stor'a-to-ry†. II. n. That which restores.—re-stor'er, n.

re-store'[2], 1 rĭ-stōr'; 2 rē-stōr', vt. To store again or anew.

re-strain', 1 rĭ-strān'; 2 re-strān', vt. 1. To hold back from acting, proceeding, or advancing; hold in check; repress. 2. To hinder from the free enjoyment or exercise of something; restrict. 3. Law. To enjoin or forbid from some threatened harmful act. 4‖. To withhold or forbear. [L. re-, back, + stringo, bind.]

Syn.: abridge, bridle, check, circumscribe, confine, constrain, curb, hinder, hold, hold back, hold in, keep, keep back, keep down, keep in, keep under, repress, restrict, suppress. Constrain is positive; restrain is negative; one is constrained to an action; he is restrained from an action. Constrain refers almost exclusively to moral force, restrain frequently to physical force, as when we speak of putting one under restraint. To restrain an action is to hold it partially or wholly in check, so that it is under pressure even in performance; to restrict an action is to fix a limit or boundary which it may not pass, but within which it is free. To repress, literally to press back, is to hold in check, and perhaps only temporarily, that which is still very active; it is a feebler word than restrain; to suppress is finally and effectually to put down; suppress is a much stronger word than restrain; as, to suppress a rebellion. See ARREST; BIND; GOVERN; KEEP; LIMIT; REFRAIN; REPRESS; TEMPER.—Ant.: aid, animate, arouse, emancipate, encourage, excite, free, impel, incite, let loose, release, set free.—re-strain"a-bil'i-ty, n. — re-strain'a-bl(e[P], a. — re-strain'ed-ly, adv. — re-strain'er, n.—re-straint', n. 1. The act of restraining, or the state of being restrained. 2. That which restrains; a restriction. Syn.: see BARRIER; INFLUENCE; RESERVE.

re-strict'[d], 1 rĭ-strikt'; 2 re-strĭct', vt. To hold or keep within limits or bounds; confine. [< L. re-, back, + stringo, bind.] Syn.: see BIND; CIRCUMSCRIBE; LIMIT; RESTRAIN.—re-stric'tion, n. 1. The act of restricting, or the state of being restricted; limitation. 2. That which restricts; a restraint. 3. Reservation; self-repression. Syn.: see BARRIER.—re-stric'tiv(e[S], a. -ly, adv.

re-tire'ment, n. 1. The act of retiring, or the state of being retired. 2. A secluded place; a retreat.

Syn.: loneliness, privacy, seclusion, solitude. In retirement one withdraws from association he has had with others; we speak of the retirement of a public man to private life, but he may still be much in company. In seclusion one shuts himself off from the society of all except intimate friends or attendants; in solitude no other person is present. While seclusion is ordinarily voluntary, solitude may be enforced; we speak of the solitude rather than the seclusion of a prisoner. As private denotes what concerns ourselves individually, privacy denotes freedom from the presence or observation of those not concerned or whom we desire not to have concerned in our affairs; privacy is more commonly temporary than seclusion; we speak of a moment's privacy. There may be loneliness without solitude, as amid an unsympathizing crowd, and solitude without loneliness, as when one is glad to be alone. See SECLUSION; SOLITUDE.—Ant.: association, companionship, company, fellowship, society.

Syn.: anarchy, confusion, disintegration, disorder, insubordination, insurrection, lawlessness, mutiny, rebellion, revolt, riot, sedition, tumult. The essential idea of revolution is a change in the form of government or constitution, or a change of rulers, otherwise than as provided by existing laws of succession, election, etc.; while such change is apt to involve armed hostilities, these make no necessary part of a revolution, which may be accomplished without a battle. Anarchy refers to the condition of a state when human government is superseded or destroyed by factions or other causes. Lawlessness is a temper of mind or condition of the community which may result in anarchy. Confusion, disorder, riot, and tumult are incidental and temporary outbreaks of lawlessness, but may not be anarchy. Insubordination is disobedience to constituted authorities on the part of one or of many individuals. Sedition is the plotting, rebellion the fighting, against the existing government. When rebellion is successful it is called revolution. A revolt is an uprising against existing authority without the comprehensive views of change in the form or administration of government that are involved in revolution. Anarchy, when more than temporary disorder, is a proposed disintegration of society, in which it is imagined that social order might exist without government. Slaves make insurrection; soldiers or sailors break out in mutiny; subject provinces rise in revolt. See CHANGE. Compare ANARCHY; REBELLION; REVOLVE.—Ant.: authority, command, control, domination, dominion, empire, government, law, loyalty, obedience, order, rule, sovereignty, submission, supremacy.

re-volve', } 1 ri-volv'; 2 re-vŏlv', vt. & vi. [RE-VOLVED', re-volv'^{s}, } RE-VOLVD'^{S}; RE-VOLV'ING.] 1. To move in an orbit about a center; move in a circle. 2. To rotate, as a body about its own center. 3. To turn over and over mentally. 4. To move in cycles; recur periodically. 5. To consider or be considered from all sides. 6‖. To consider; meditate. [< L. re-, back, + volvo, turn.]

Syn.: roll, rotate, turn. Any round body rolls which continuously touches with successive portions of its surface successive portions of another surface; a wagon-wheel rolls along the ground. To rotate is said of a body that has a circular motion about its own center or axis; to revolve is said of a body that moves about a center outside of itself. A revolving body may also either rotate or roll at the same time:

the earth revolves around the sun, and rotates on its own axis; in popular usage, the earth is often said to revolve about its own axis, or to have a daily "revolution," but rotate and "rotation" are the more accurate terms. A cylinder over which an endless belt is drawn is said to roll as regards the belt, tho it rotates as regards its own axis. Any object that is in contact with or connected with a rolling body is often said to roll; as, the car rolls smoothly along the track. Objects whose motion approximates or suggests a rotary motion along a supporting surface are also said to roll; as, ocean waves roll in upon the shore, or the ship rolls in the trough of the sea. Turn is a conversational and popular word often used vaguely for rotate or revolve, or for any motion about a fixed point, especially for a motion less than a complete "rotation" or "revolution": a man turns his head or turns on his heel; a gate turns on its hinges.—Ant.: bind, chafe, grind, slide, slip, stick.—re-volv'a-bl(e^{F}, a.—re-volv'er, n. 1. One who or that which revolves. 2. A repeating firearm with a revolvable chamber.

[OF., < L. sacramentum, oath.]

Syn.: ceremony, communion, eucharist, Lord's Supper, observance, ordinance, rite, service, solemnity. A ceremony is a form expressing reverence, or at least respect; we may speak of religious ceremonies, the ceremonies of polite society, the ceremonies of a coronation, an inauguration, etc. An observance has more than a formal obligation, reaching or approaching a religious sacredness; a stated religious observance viewed as established by authority is called an ordinance; viewed as an established custom, it is a rite. Any religious act, especially a public act, viewed as a means of serving God is called a service. The terms sacrament and ordinance in the religious sense are often used interchangeably; the ordinance derives its sacredness from the authority that ordained it, while the sacrament possesses a sacredness due to something in itself, even when viewed simply as a representation or memorial. The Lord's Supper is the Scriptural name for the observance commemorating the death of Christ; the word communion is once applied to it (1 Cor. x, 16), but not as a distinctive name; at an early period, however, the name communion was so applied, as denoting the communing of Christians with their Lord, or with one another. The term eucharist describes the Lord's Supper as a thanksgiving service; it is also called by preeminence the sacrament.—sac"ra-men'tal, a. — sac"ra-men'tal-ly, adv. — sac"ra-men'ta-ry, a.

[< L. sagio, perceive quickly.] Syn.: able, acute, apt, clear-sighted, discerning, intelligent, judicious, keen, keen-sighted, keen-witted, perspicacious, quick of scent, quick-scented, rational, sage, sensible, sharp, sharp-witted, shrewd, wise. Sagacious refers to a power of tracing the hidden or recondite by slight indications, as by instinct or intuition; with reference to inferior animals it is often applied to special keenness of sense-perception as of a hound in following a trail. In human affairs sagacious refers to a power of ready, far-reaching, and accurate inference from observed facts, perhaps in themselves very slight, that seems like a special sense; or to a similar readiness to foresee the results of any action, especially upon human motives or conduct—a kind of prophetic common sense. Sagacious is a broader and nobler word than shrewd, and not capable of the invidious sense which the latter word often bears: on the other hand, sagacious is less lofty than wise in its full sense, and more limited to practical matters. See ACUTE; ASTUTE; KNOWING; POLITIC; PRUDENT; WISE.—

Syn.: allowance, compensation, earnings, fee, hire, honorarium, pay, payment, recompense, remuneration, requital, stipend, wages. An allowance is a stipulated amount furnished at regular intervals as a matter of discretion or gratuity, as of food to besieged soldiers, or of money to a child or ward. Compensation is a comprehensive word signifying a return for a service done. Remuneration is applied to matters of great amount or importance. Recompense is a still wider and loftier word, with less suggestion of calculation and market value; there are services for which affection and gratitude are the sole and sufficient recompense; earnings, fees, hire, pay, salary, and wages are forms of compensation and may be included in compensation, remuneration, or recompense. Pay is commercial, and strictly signifies an exact pecuniary equivalent for a thing or service, except when the contrary is expressly state i, as when we speak of high pay or poor pay. Wages denotes what a worker receives. Earnings is often used as exactly equivalent to wages, but may be used with reference to the real value of work done or service rendered, and even applied to inanimate things; as, the earnings of capital. Hire is distinctly mercenary or menial, but as a noun has gone out of popular use, tho the verb to hire is common. Salary is for literary or professional work, wages for handicraft or other comparatively inferior service; a salary is regarded as more permanent than wages; an editor receives a salary, a compositor receives wages. Stipend has become exclusively a literary word. A fee is given for a single service or privilege, and is sometimes in the nature of a gratuity. Compare REQUITE.

sale, 1 sēl; 2 sāl. n. 1. The act of selling; the exchange of property for money or its equivalent. 2. An auction. 3. Opportunity of selling; demand by purchasers; market. [< AS. sala, < sellan, sell.]

Syn.: bargain, barter, change, deal, exchange, trade. A bargain is strictly an agreement or contract to buy and sell (see CONTRACT), tho the word is often used to denote the entire transaction and also as a designation for the thing sold or purchased. Change and exchange are words of wider signification, applying only incidentally to the transfer of property or value; a change secures something different in any way or by any means; an exchange secures something as an equivalent or return, tho not necessarily as payment for what is given. Barter is the exchange of one commodity for another, the word being used generally with reference to portable commodities. Trade in the broad sense may apply to vast businesses (as the book-trade), but as denoting a single transaction is used chiefly in regard to things of moderate value, when it becomes nearly synonymous with barter. Sale is commonly, and with increasing strictness, limited to the transfer of property for money, or for something estimated at a money value or considered as equivalent to so much money (compare definition 3). A deal in the political sense is a bargain, substitution, or transfer for the benefit of certain persons or parties against all others; as, the nomination was the result of a deal; in business it may have a similar meaning, but it frequently signifies simply a sale or exchange, a dealing; as, a heavy deal in stocks.—sale'a-bl(e[F], a. Same as SALABLE.—sales'man, n. [-MEN, pl.] A man who sells goods.—sales'wo"man, n. A woman who sells goods, as in a shop or store; vulgarly, saleslady.—sale'work", n. Work made for sale; careless work.

schol'ar, } 1 skel'ər; 2 scŏl'ar, n. 1. One who learns scol'ar^{F}, } under a teacher; a pupil; learner. 2. A person eminent for learning. 3. The holder of a scholarship. [< Gr.$^{L+AS}$ scholē, school.]

Syn.: disciple, learner, pupil, savant, student. The primary sense of a scholar is one who is being schooled; thence the word passes to denote one who is apt in school work, and finally one who is thoroughly schooled, master of what the schools can teach, an erudite, accomplished person; when used without qualification, the word is generally understood in this latter sense; as, he is manifestly a scholar. Pupil signifies one under the close personal supervision or instruction of a teacher or tutor. Those under instruction in schools below the academic grade are technically and officially termed pupils. The word pupil is uniformly so used in the Reports of the Commissioner of Education of the United States, but popular American usage prefers scholar in the original sense; as, teachers and scholars enjoyed a holiday. Those under instruction in Sunday-schools are uniformly designated as Sunday-school scholars. Student is applied to those in the higher grades or courses of study, as the academic, collegiate, scientific, etc. Student suggests less proficiency than scholar in the highest sense, the student being one who is learning, the scholar one who has learned. On the other hand, student suggests less of personal supervision than pupil; thus, the college student often becomes the private pupil of some instructor in special studies. For disciple, etc., compare synonyms for ADHERENT.—Ant.: dunce, fool, idiot, idler, ignoramus, illiterate person.

Syn.: art, knowledge. Knowledge of a single fact, not known as related to any other, or of many facts not known as having any mutual relations or as comprehended under any general law, does not reach the meaning of science; science is knowledge reduced to law and embodied in system. The knowledge of various countries gathered by an observant traveler may be a heterogeneous medley of facts, which gain real value only when coordinated and arranged by the man of science. Art always relates to something to be done, science to something to be known. Not only must art be discriminated from science, but art in the industrial or mechanical sense must be distinguished from art in the esthetic sense; the former aims chiefly at utility, the latter at beauty. The mechanic arts are the province of the artisan, the esthetic or fine arts are the province of the artist; all the industrial arts, as of weaving or printing, arithmetic or navigation, are governed by exact rules. Art in the highest esthetic sense, while it makes use of rules, transcends all rule; no rules can be given for the production of a painting like Raffael's "Transfiguration," a statue like the Apollo Belvedere, or a poem like the Iliad. Science does not, like the mechanic arts, make production its direct aim, yet its possible productive application in the arts is a constant stimulus to scientific investigation; the science, as in the case of chemistry or electricity, is urged on to higher development by the demands of the art, while the art is perfected by the advance of the science. Creative art seeking beauty for its own sake is closely akin to pure science seeking knowledge for its own sake. See ART; KNOWLEDGE.

se-crete', 1 si-krit'; 2 se-crēt', vt. [SE-CRET'ED[d]; SE-CRET'ING.] 1. To remove or keep from observation; conceal; hide. 2. Physiol. To separate or elaborate from blood or sap by the process of secretion.

Syn.: conceal. Secrete is a stronger word than conceal, and is used chiefly of such material objects as may be separated from the person, or from their ordinary surroundings, and put in unlooked-for places; a man conceals a scar on his face, but does not secrete it; a thief secretes stolen goods; an officer may also be said to secrete himself to watch the thief. See HIDE.—se-cre'tion, n. 1. The process by which materials are separated from blood or sap and elaborated into new substances. 2. The substance secreted, as saliva or milk. 3. The act of concealing. 4. Geol. A deposit of mineral matter in successive coatings, filling cavities and fissures.—se-cre'tiv(es, a. 1. Inclined to secrecy. 2. Producing secretion.—se-cre'tiv(e-ness[s], n.—se-cre'to-ry, a. Pertaining to secretion.

sect, 1 sekt; 2 sĕct, n. 1. A body of persons distinguished by peculiarities of faith and practise; especially, a body of dissenters from an established church; a denomination; communion. 2. Any number of persons united in opinion or interest, as in the state or in society; a party or faction; an order. 3. A kind; a sex: obsolete or vulgar. 4§. A cutting in horticulture. [< F. secte, < L. secta, faction, school, < seco, separate.]

Syn.: church, communion, denomination, heresy, heterodoxy, party, schism, school. Heresy or heterodoxy is a departure from the established doctrine; a schism is a division of the church either on matters of faith or practise; schism is applied also to non-religious organizations. A sect or denomination is an organized body of believers distinct in doctrine or practise, or in both, from others; sect is an opprobrious and denomination an honorable term for the same body. Within a denomination there may be schools differing on minor matters, or parties favoring or opposing certain persons or measures, without breach of essential and organic unity. Church is often used as synonymous with denomination; as, the Methodist Church; the Presbyterian Church. The members of a state church, or those who represent a foreign state church, commonly apply the name church only to their own organization, terming all other religious bodies sects. Communion designates those who share a common faith, rather with reference to their spiritual unity than to their organization or their relations to other bodies of believers; as, the Roman Catholic communion.

—sec-ta'ri-an. I. a. Pertaining to a sect; bigoted. II. n. One who is sectarian.—sec-ta'ri-an-ism, n.—sec'ta-ry, n. [-RIES², pl.] A sectarian. sec'ta-rist‡.

[< L. securus, < se-, without, + cura, care.]

Syn.: assured, careless, certain, confident, defended, guarded, impregnable, insured, protected, safe, sure, unassailable, undisturbed, unmolested, unsuspecting, untroubled. See FIRM.—Ant.: dangerous, dubious, exposed, hazardous, imperiled, insecure, perilous, risky.—Prep.: secure of advantage; secure from loss; secure in the fastness; secure against attack. —se-cur'a-bl(eP, a.—se-cure'ly, adv.

se-cur'i-ty, n. [-TIES², pl.] 1. The state of being secure. se-cure'ness‡. 2. One who or that which secures; surety. 3. pl. Written promises or assurances for payment of money, as stocks, bonds, etc

Syn.: bail, collateral, earnest, gage, pledge, surety. The first four words agree in denoting something given or deposited as an assurance of something to be given, paid, or done. An earnest is of the same kind as that to be given, a portion of it delivered in advance, as when part of the purchase-money is paid, according to the common expression, "to bind the bargain." A pledge or security may be wholly different in kind from that to be given or paid, and may greatly exceed it in value. Security may be of real or personal property—anything of sufficient value to make the creditor secure; a pledge (as here considered) is always of personal property or chattels. Every pawnshop contains unredeemed pledges; land, merchandise, bonds, etc., are frequently offered and accepted as security. Collateral is property, as stocks, bonds, etc., actually deposited as security, often termed "collateral security." A person may become security or surety for another's payment of a debt, appearance in court, etc.; in the latter case, he is said to become bail for that person; the person accused gives bail for himself. Gage survives only as a literary word, chiefly in certain phrases; as, "the gage of battle." See RAMPART.—Prep.: security for the payment of a debt; security to the state, for the prisoner, in the sum of a thousand dollars.

self. I. a. 1. Same; identical: obsolete except in the compound selfsame. 2. Pure; unmixed: applied especially to colors. II. n. [SELVES, pl.] 1. An individual known or considered as the subject of his own consciousness; any thing considered as having a distinct personality. 2. Personal interest or advantage. [< AS. self.]

Self affixed to certain personal pronouns and pronominal adjectives gives forms that (1) express emphasis; as, I my*self* will go; or (2) are used reflexively; as, he has hurt him*self*. Self is a frequent initial element in compound words, being (1) sometimes the object of a verb contained in the second element, as in self-abhorrence (the act of abhorring oneself), and (2) sometimes its subject or agent, as in self-diffusive (diffusive by its own power). Most of these words require no definition other than that of the second element, taken in connection with this note.

The compounds requiring definition will be found below: —self-ab"ne-ga'tion, n. The complete putting aside of self and the claims of self for the sake of some person or object; self-sacrifice. Syn.: self-control, self-denial, self-devotion, self-renunciation, self-sacrifice. Self-control is holding oneself within due limits in pleasures and duties, as in all things else; self-denial, the giving up of pleasures for the sake of duty. Self-renunciation surrenders conscious rights; self-abnegation forgets that there is anything to surrender. There were devotees who practised very little self-denial with very much self-renunciation. A mother will care for a sick child with complete self-abnegation, but without a thought of self-denial. Self-devotion is heart-consecration of self to a person or cause with readiness for any needed sacrifice. Self-sacrifice is the strongest term of all, and contemplates the gift of self as actually made. We speak of the self-sacrifice of Jesus, where any other term would be feeble or inappropriate.—Ant.: self-gratification, self-indulgence, self-will.—self"-bind'er, n. A harvesting-machine with an attachment for binding sheaves of grain.—s.-command, n. The state of having all the faculties and powers fully and effectively at command: more positive and less repressive than self-control.—s.-complacent, a. Satisfied or pleased with oneself.—s.-complacency, n.—s.-conceit, n. An unduly high opinion of oneself or of one's own abilities, acquirements, etc.; self-esteem; vanity; egotism. send, 1 send; 2 sĕnd, v. [SENT; SEND'ING.] I. t. 1. To cause or direct to go or pass; authorize to go and act; dispatch. 2. To cause to be conveyed to another place; forward. 3. To impel or drive by force; throw; cast; hurl. 4. To cause to come, fall, or befall; grant; inflict; bestow. 5. To cause to become or be; grant to be; make; drive; as, Heaven send you well! his troubles sent him mad. 6. To cause to glance or gaze; direct. II. i. To dispatch an agent, message, etc. [< AS. sendan, send.]

Syn.: cast, delegate, depute, dispatch, discharge, dismiss, emit, fling, forward, hurl, impel, lance, launch, project, propel, sling, throw, transmit. Send in its most common use involves personal efficiency without personal presence; according to the adage, "If you want your business done, go; if not, send"; one sends a letter or a bullet, a messenger or a message. In all the derived uses this same idea controls; if one sends a ball into his own heart, the action is away from the directing hand, and he is viewed as the passive recipient of his own act; it is with an approach to personification that we speak of the bow sending the arrow or the gun the shot. To dispatch is to send hastily or very promptly, ordinarily with a destination in view; to dismiss is to send away from oneself without reference to a destination; as, to dismiss a clerk, an application, or an annoying subject. To discharge is to send away so as to relieve a person or thing of a load; we discharge a gun or discharge the contents; as applied to persons, discharge is a harsher term than dismiss. To emit is to send forth from within, with no reference to a destination; as, the sun emits light and heat. Transmit, from the Latin, is a dignified term, often less vigorous than the Saxon send, but preferable at times in literary or scientific use; as, to transmit the crown, or the feud, from generation to generation; to transmit a charge of electricity. Transmit fixes the attention more on the intervening agency, as send does upon the points of departure and destination.—Ant.: bring, carry, convey, get, give, hand, hold, keep, receive, retain.—Prep.: to send from the hand to or toward (rarely at) a mark; send to a friend by a messenger or by mail; send a person into banishment; send a shell among the enemy.—send'er, n.

[F., < L. sensatus, intelligent.] Syn.: emotion, feeling, perception, sense. Sensation is the mind's consciousness due to a bodily affection as of heat or cold; perception is the cognition of some external object which is the cause or occasion of the sensation; the sensation of heat may be connected with the perception of a fire. While sensations are connected with the body, emotions, as joy, grief, etc., are wholly of the mind. "As the most of them [the sensations] are positively agreeable or the opposite, they are nearly akin to those emotions, as hope or terror, or those passions, as anger and envy, which are acknowledged by all to belong exclusively to the spirit, and to involve no relation whatever to matter or the bodily organism. Such feelings are not infrequently styled sensations, though improperly." PORTER Human Intellect § 112, p. 128. Feeling is a term popularly denoting what is felt, whether through the body or by the mind alone, and includes both sensation and emotion. A sense is an organ or faculty of sensation or of perception. See FEELING.

sen"si-bil'i-ty, 1 sen"sı-bil'ı-tı; 2 sĕn"si-bĭl'i-ty, n. [-TIES^{z}, pl.] 1. The capability of sensation; power to perceive or feel. 2. Psychol. The capacity of sensation and rational emotion, as distinguished from intellect and will. 3. Susceptibility to outside influences.

Syn.: sensitiveness, sensibility. Sensibility, in the philosophical sense, denotes the capacity of emotion or feeling as distinguished from the intellect and the will. (Compare synonyms for SENSATION.) In popular use sensibility denotes sometimes capacity of feeling of any kind; as, sensibility to heat or cold; sometimes, a peculiar readiness to be the subject of feeling, especially of the higher feelings; as, the sensibility of the artist or the poet; a person of great or fine sensibility. Sensitiveness denotes an especial delicacy of sensibility, ready to be excited by the slightest cause, as displayed, for instance, in the sensitive-plant. Susceptibility is rather a capacity to take up, receive, and, as it were, to contain feeling, so that a person of great susceptibility is capable of being not only readily but deeply moved; sensitiveness is more superficial, susceptibility more pervading. Thus, in physics, the sensitiveness of a magnetic needle is the ease with which it may be deflected, as by another magnet; its susceptibility is the degree to which it can be magnetized by a given magnetic force or the amount of magnetism it will hold. So a person of great sensitiveness is quickly and keenly affected by any external influence, as by music, pathos, or ridicule, while a person of great susceptibility is not only touched, but moved to his inmost soul. See FEELING.—Ant.: coldness, deadness, hardness, insensibility, numbness, unconsciousness.

Syn.: cover, defend, guard, harbor, protect, screen, shield, ward. Anything is covered when something is completely extended over it: a vessel is covered with a lid; the head is covered with a hat. That which covers may also defend or protect; thus, troops interposed between some portion of their own army and the enemy are often called a covering party. To shelter is to cover so as to protect from injury or annoyance; as, the roof shelters from the storm; woods shelter from the heat. To defend (Latin defendere, to strike away) implies the actual, protect (Latin protegere, to cover before) implies the possible use of force or resisting power; guard implies sustained vigilance with readiness for conflict; we defend a person or thing against actual attack; we guard or protect against possible assault or injury. A powerful person may protect one who is weak by simply declaring himself his friend; he defends him by some form of active championship. An inanimate object may protect, as a garment from cold; defend is used but rarely, and by somewhat violent metaphor, in such connection. Protect is more complete than guard or defend; an object may be faithfully guarded or bravely defended in vain, but that which is protected is secure. See CHERISH. Compare synonyms for HIDE; DEFENSE.—Ant.: betray, cast out, expel, expose, give up, refuse, reject, surrender.—Prep.: shelter under a roof from the storm; in the fortress, behind or within the walls, from attack.—shel'ter-er, n.

sin, n. 1. Any want of conformity to or transgression of a rule or requirement of rectitude or duty; also, the state or condition of having thus transgressed; wickedness: distinguished legally from crime. 2. A special instance of such violation; a transgression; loosely, a fault; an error; offense. 3‖. A sin-offering.

Syn.: crime, criminality, delinquency, depravity, evil, guilt, ill-doing, immorality, iniquity, misdeed, offense, transgression, ungodliness, unrighteousness, vice, viciousness, wickedness, wrong, wrong-doing. Sin is any lack of holiness, any defect of moral purity and truth, whether in heart or life, whether of commission or of omission. "All unrighteousness is sin." 1 John v, 17. Transgression, as its etymology indicates, is the stepping over a specific enactment, whether of God or man, ordinarily by overt act, but in the broadest sense in volition or desire. Sin may be either act or state; transgression is always an act, mental or physical. Crime is often used for a flagrant violation of right, but in the technical sense denotes specific violation of human law. Guilt is desert of and exposure to punishment because of sin. Depravity denotes no act, but a perverted moral condition from which any act of sin may proceed. Sin in the generic sense, as denoting a state of heart, is synonymous with depravity; in the specific sense, as in the expression a sin, or in the plural sins, the term is synonymous with transgression or transgressions. Immorality denotes outward violation of the moral law. Compare CRIMINAL; OFFENSE.—Ant.: godliness, goodness, holiness, integrity, morality, purity, right, righteousness, sinlessness, uprightness, virtue. Compare synonyms for VIRTUE.—sin′less, a. Having no sin; guiltless; innocent. Syn.: see INNOCENT; PERFECT.—sin′-of″fer-ing, n. An offering made in atonement for sin.

since,) 1 sins; 2 sĭnc. I. adv. 1. From a past time, men-sinseP,) tioned or referred to, up to the present. 2. At some time after a certain past time or event and before now; after and in the mean time. 3. In time before the present; before this; before now; ago.

Syn.: ago. The adverb since, in this connection, refers to quite recent past time, while ago covers past time in general; as, "A messenger was here to see you." "How long since?" or "How long ago?" If one says, "The Spanish Armada was destroyed off the coast of England," to ask "How long since?" instead of "How long ago?" would have a grotesque effect, as if the event had happened lately. But of some historic character we may say, "He died a century ago."

II. prep. During or within the time after; ever after, or at a time after. III. conj. 1. From and subsequently to the time when; during or within the time after that. 2. Because of or following upon the fact that; inasmuch as; seeing that; because. [< AS. singan, sing.]

Syn.: carol, chant, chirp, chirrup, hum, warble. To sing is primarily and ordinarily to utter a succession of articulate musical sounds with the human voice. The word has come to include any succession of musical sounds; we say the bird or the rivulet sings; we speak of "the singing quality" of an instrument, and by still wider extension of meaning we say the teakettle or the cricket sings. To chant is to sing in solemn and somewhat uniform cadence; chant is ordinarily applied to non-metrical religious compositions. To carol is to sing joyously, and to warble (kindred with whirl) is to sing with trills or quavers, usually also with the idea of joy. Carol and warble are especially applied to the singing of birds. To chirp is to utter a brief musical sound, perhaps often repeated in the same key, as by certain small birds, insects, etc. To chirrup is to utter a somewhat similar sound; the word is often used of a brief sharp sound uttered as a signal to animate or rouse a horse or other animal. To hum is to utter murmuring sounds with somewhat monotonous musical cadence, usually with closed lips; we speak also of the hum of machinery, etc.—sing′-ing-mas″ter, n. An instructor in vocal music.

Syn.: brief, delineation, draft, drawing, outline, picture, plan, skeleton. An outline gives only the bounding or determining lines of a figure or a scene; a sketch may give not only lines, but shading and color, but is hasty and incomplete. The lines of a sketch are seldom so full and continuous as those of an outline. Draft and plan apply especially to mechanical drawing, of which outline, sketch, and drawing are also used; a plan is strictly a view from above, as of a building or machine, giving the lines of a horizontal section, originally at the level of the ground, now in a wider sense at any height; as, a plan of the cellar; a plan of the attic. A design is such a preliminary sketch as indicates the object to be accomplished or the result to be attained, and is understood to be original. One may make a drawing of any well-known mechanism, or a drawing from another man's design: but if he says "the design is mine," he claims it as his own invention or composition. In written composition an outline gives simply the main divisions, and is often called a skeleton; a somewhat fuller suggestion of illustration, treatment, and style is given in a sketch. A lawyer's brief is a succinct statement of the main facts involved in a case, and of the main heads of his argument on points of law, with references to authorities. See PICTURE; DESIGN.—sketch'-book", n. A blank book used for sketching; hence, a printed volume of literary sketches.—sketch'er, n.—sketch'i-ly, adv.—sketch'i-ness, n.—sketch'y, a. Like a sketch; rough; unfinished.

Syn.: aroma, bouquet, fragrance, odor, perfume, savor, scent, stench, stink. Smell is the generic word including all the rest. Aroma, fragrance, and perfume are ordinarily pleasing; odor, savor, and scent may be so. Odor is nearly synonymous with smell, but is susceptible of more delicate use; as, the odor of incense. An aroma is a delicate and spicy odor, as of fine coffee; bouquet is said chiefly of the delicate odor of certain wines. We speak of the fragrance or perfume of flowers, but fragrance is more delicate; a perfume may be so strong and rich as to be repulsive by excess. There is a tendency to restrict the application of perfume to the artificial preparations called collectively "perfumery." Scent is chiefly used for the characteristic odor of an animal by which it is tracked or avoided by other animals; the word is also applied to any odor, natural or artificial, especially when faintly diffused through the air; as, the scent of mignonette or of new-mown hay. Savor is chiefly said of the appetizing odor evolved from articles of food by the processes of cooking. Any smell that is at once foul, strong, and pervasive may be called a stench. Smell and scent denote also the sense to which odors appeal; as, man has the sense of smell; the keen scent of the foxhound. See SAVOR.

[< AS. sāwel, soul.] —Syn.: mind, spirit. The soul includes the intellect, sensibilities, and will; beyond what is expressed by the word mind, the soul denotes especially the moral, the immortal nature; we say of a dead body, the soul (not the mind) has fled. Spirit is used especially in contradistinction from matter; it may in many cases be substituted for soul, but soul has commonly a fuller and more determinate meaning; we can conceive of spirits as having no moral nature; the fairies, elves, and brownies of mythology might be termed spirits, but not souls. In the figurative sense, spirit denotes animation, excitability, perhaps impatience; as, a lad of spirit; he sang with spirit; he replied with spirit. Soul denotes energy and depth of feeling, as when we speak of soulful eyes; or it may denote the very life of anything; as, the soul of harmony. Compare MIND.

[< F. son, < L. sonus, sound.]

Syn.: noise, note, tone. Sound is the most comprehensive word, applying to anything that is audible. Tone is sound considered as having some musical quality or as expressive of some feeling; noise is sound considered without reference to musical quality or as distinctly unmusical or discordant. Thus, in the most general sense noise and sound scarcely differ, and we say almost indifferently "I heard a sound" or "I heard a noise." We speak of a fine, musical, or pleasing sound, but never thus of a noise. In music, tone may denote either a musical sound or the interval between two such sounds, but in the most careful usage the latter is now distinguished as the "interval," leaving tone to stand only for the sound. Note in music strictly denotes the character representing a sound, but in loose popular usage it denotes the sound also, and becomes practically equivalent to tone. Aside from its musical use, tone is chiefly applied to that quality of the human voice by which feeling is expressed; as, he spoke in a cheery tone; the word is similarly applied to the voices of birds and other animals, and sometimes to inanimate objects. As used of a musical instrument, tone denotes the general quality of its sounds collectively considered. See NOISE.

[< LL. spontaneus, < L. sponte, of free will.]

Syn.: automatic, instinctive, involuntary, unbidden, voluntary, willing. That is spontaneous which is freely done, with no external compulsion and, in human actions, without special premeditation or distinct determination of the will; that is voluntary which is freely done with distinct act of will; that is involuntary which is independent of the will, and perhaps in opposition to it; a willing act is not only in accordance with will, but with desire. Thus voluntary and involuntary, which are antonyms of each other, are both partial synonyms of spontaneous. We speak of spontaneous generation, spontaneous combustion, spontaneous sympathy, an involuntary start, an unbidden tear, voluntary agreement, willing submission. A babe's smile in answer to that of its mother is spontaneous; the smile of a pouting child wheedled into good humor is involuntary. In physiology the action of the heart and lungs is called involuntary; the growth of the hair and nails is spontaneous; the action of swallowing is voluntary up to a certain point, beyond which it becomes involuntary or automatic. In the fullest sense of that which is not only without the will but distinctly in opposition to it, or compulsory, involuntary becomes an antonym, not only of voluntary but of spontaneous; as, involuntary servitude. A spontaneous outburst of applause is of necessity an act of volition, but so completely dependent on sympathetic impulse that it would seem frigid to call it voluntary, while to call it involuntary would imply some previous purpose or inclination not to applaud.

—spontaneous generation, same as ABIOGENESIS.—spon"ta-ne'i-ty, n. [-TIES², pl.] Spontaneous quality.—spon-ta'ne-ous-ly, adv.—spon-ta'ne-ous-ness, n.

stain, 1 stēn; 2 stān, v. I. t. 1. To make a stain upon; discolor. 2. To color by the use of a dye or stain. 3. To bring a moral stain upon. II. i. To take or impart a stain. [Abbr. of DISTAIN.]

Syn.: blot, color, discolor, disgrace, dishonor, dye, soil, spot, sully, tarnish, tinge, tint. To color is to impart a color desired or undesired, temporary or permanent, or, in the intransitive use, to assume a color in any way; as, he colored with shame and vexation. To dye is to impart a color intentionally and with a view to permanence, and especially so as to pervade the substance or fiber of that to which it is applied. To stain is primarily to discolor, to impart a color undesired and perhaps unintended, and which may or may not be permanent. Thus, a character "dyed in the wool" is one that has received some early permanent and pervading influence; a character stained with a crime or guilt is debased and perverted. Stain is, however, used of giving an intended and perhaps pleasing color to wood, glass, etc., by an application of coloring-matter which enters the substance a little below the surface, in distinction from painting, in which coloring-matter is spread upon the surface; dyeing is generally said of wool, yarn, cloth, or similar materials which are dipped into the coloring liquid. Figuratively, a standard or a garment may be dyed with blood in honorable warfare; an assassin's weapon is stained with the blood of his victim. To tinge is to color slightly. It may be used of giving a slight flavor, or a slight admixture of one ingredient or quality with another that is more pronounced. See BLEMISH; DEFILE; POLLUTE. Compare FOUL.—stain'er, n.

[< AS. stelan, steal.]

Syn.: abstract, commit larceny, commit theft, embezzle, extort, filch, pilfer, pillage, plunder, purloin, rob, swindle. To commit larceny is to take and carry away the personal property of another with felonious intent. To commit theft (more commonly with the indefinite article, to commit a theft) has the same general meaning, but is not a common phrase in legal use. To steal is, in law, to commit simple larceny; but the word may be applied to any furtive, covert, or surreptitious taking of anything, whether material or immaterial. To pilfer is to steal petty articles. The word filch especially emphasizes the secrecy and slyness of the act; filch is ordinarily applied to things of little value, but may apply to the most precious, as in Shakespeare, "he that filches from me my good name." To purloin is etymologically to carry far away, and is commonly applied to the dishonest removal of articles of value or importance. To rob is, in law, to take feloniously from the person by force or fear, as in highway robbery; in a more extended use it is applied to the felonious taking of articles of value from places as well as persons, generally with suggestion of force and violence. To abstract is to take secretly and feloniously from among other things belonging to another. To embezzle is to appropriate fraudulently to oneself funds received and held in trust. To swindle is to cheat grossly, commonly by false pretenses, but is not a recognized legal offense under that name; one form of swindling, the "obtaining money by false pretenses," is an indictable offense, but much swindling may be carried on under the forms of law. To plunder is to take property from an enemy in time of war, and is not a crime at law. See ABSTRACT.—Ant.: give back, give up, make good, refund, repay, restore, return, surrender.—steal, n. [Colloq.] The act of stealing; a theft.—steal'er, n.—steal'ing, n.

sub-jec'tiv(e^{s}, 1 sub-jek'tıv; 2 sŭb-jĕc'tiv, a. 1. Relating to the subject of mental states, the ego; proceeding from or taking place within the thinking subject: opposed to objective. 2. In literature and art, giving prominence to the subject or author as treating of his own experience.

Syn.: objective. Subjective and objective are synonyms in but one point of view, being, for the most part, strictly antonyms. Objective signifies relating to the object of mental states, that is, to something outside the perceiving mind; in brief phrase it may be said that subjective relates to something within the mind, objective to something without. A mountain, as a mass of a certain size, contour, color, etc., is an objective fact; the impression our mind receives, the mental picture it forms of the mountain, is subjective. But this subjective impression may become itself the object of thought (called "subject-object"), as when we compare our mental picture of the mountain with our idea of a plain or river. The direct experiences of the soul, as joy, grief, hope, fear, are purely subjective; the outward causes of these experiences, as prosperity, bereavement, disappointment, are objective. Different individuals may receive different subjective impressions from the same objective fact, that which to one is a cause of hope being to another a cause of fear, etc. The style of a writer is called objective when it derives its materials mainly from or reaches out toward external objects; it is called subjective when it derives its materials from or constantly tends to revert to the personal experience of the author. See INHERENT. -ly, adv. -ness, n.—sub"jec-tiv'i-ty, n.

sub′si-dy, l sub′sı-di; 2 sŭb′si-dy, n. [-DIES[z], pl.] Pecuniary aid granted by a government to an individual or commercial enterprise; money furnished by one nation to another to aid it in war against a third; formerly, in England, a special aid or tax in emergencies, granted to the King. [< L. subsidium, < sub, under, + sedeo, sit.]

Syn.: aid, allowance, bonus, bounty, gift, grant, indemnity, pension, premium, reward, support, subvention, tribute. A nation grants a subsidy to an ally, pays a tribute to a conqueror. An indemnity is in the nature of things limited and temporary, while a tribute might be exacted indefinitely. A nation may also grant a subsidy to its own citizens as a means of promoting the public welfare; as, a subsidy to a steamship company. The somewhat rare term subvention is especially applied to a grant of governmental aid to a literary or artistic enterprise. Governmental aid to a commercial or industrial enterprise other than a transportation company is more frequently called a bounty than a subsidy; as, the sugar bounty. The word bounty may be applied to almost any regular or stipulated allowance by a government to a citizen or citizens; as, a bounty for enlisting in the army; a bounty for killing wolves. A bounty is offered for something to be done; a pension is granted for something that has been done.—sub′si-dize, vt. [-DIZED; -DIZ″ING.] To furnish with a subsidy. sub′si-dist‡.

Syn.: hint, innuendo, insinuation, intimation. A suggestion brings something before the mind less directly than by formal or explicit statement, as by a partial statement, an incidental allusion, an illustration, a question, or the like. Suggestion is often used of an unobtrusive statement of one's views or wishes to another, leaving consideration and any consequent action entirely to that person's judgment, and is hence, in many cases, the most respectful way in which to convey one's views to a superior or a stranger. A suggestion may be given unintentionally, and even unconsciously, as when we say an author has "a suggestive style." An intimation is a suggestion in brief utterance, or sometimes by significant act, gesture, or token, of one's meaning or wishes; in the latter case it is often the act of a superior; as,

God in his providence gives us intimations of his will. A hint is little more limited in expression, and is always covert, but frequently with good intent; as, to give one a hint of danger or of opportunity. Insinuation and innuendo are used in the bad sense; an insinuation is a covert or partly veiled injurious utterance, sometimes to the very person attacked; an innuendo is commonly secret as well as sly, as if pointing one out for opprobrium. See COUNSEL.—sug-ges'tiv(eS), a. Fitted or tending to suggest. -ly, adv. -ness, n.

su"per-nat'u-ral, 1 siū"pər-nach'u-[or -nat'yu-]rəl; 2 sū"per-năch'u-[or -năt'yu-]ral. I. a. 1. Transcending the forces of nature; miraculous. 2. Pertaining to the supernatural. 3. R. C. Theol. Transcending the powers and exigencies of any created nature.

Syn.: miraculous, preternatural, superhuman. The supernatural (super, above) is above or superior to the recognized powers of nature; the preternatural (preter, beyond) is aside from or beyond what we have been accustomed to regard as the result of natural law, often in the sense of inauspicious; as, a preternatural gloom. Miraculous is more emphatic and specific than supernatural, as referring to the direct personal intervention of divine power. Some hold that a miracle, as the raising of the dead, is a direct suspension and even violation of natural laws by the fiat of the Creator, and so is supernatural; others hold that the miracle is simply the calling forth of a power residing in the laws of nature, but not within their ordinary operation, and dependent on a distinct act of God, so that the miraculous might be termed "extranatural," rather than supernatural. All that is beyond human power is superhuman; as, prophecy gives evidence of superhuman knowledge; the word is sometimes applied to remarkable manifestations of human power, surpassing all that is ordinary. —Ant.: common, natural, ordinary, usual.

su"per-nat'u-ral, n. That which is outside the range of the accepted course of nature; that which transcends nature and includes the Creator. -ly, adv. -ness, n.—su"per-nat'u-ral-ism, n. 1. The quality of being supernatural. 2. Theol. Belief in the supernatural.

[< L.[F] sub, beneath, + porto, carry.]

Syn.: bear, carry, hold up, keep up, maintain, prop, sustain, uphold. Support and sustain alike signify to hold up or keep up, to prevent from falling or sinking; but sustain has a special sense of continuous exertion or strength, as when we speak of sustained endeavor or a sustained note; a flower is supported by the stem or a temple-roof by arches; the foundations of a great building sustain an enormous pressure; to sustain life implies a greater exigency and need than to support life; to say one is sustained under affliction is to say more both of the severity of the trial and the completeness of the upholding than if we say he is supported. To bear is the most general word, denoting all holding up or keeping up of any object, whether in rest or motion; in the derived senses it refers to something that is a tax upon strength or endurance; as, to bear a strain; to bear pain or grief. To maintain is to keep in a state or condition, especially in an excellent and desirable condition; as, to maintain health or reputation; to maintain one's position; to maintain a cause or proposition is to hold it against opposition or difficulty. To support may be partial, to maintain is complete; maintain is a word of more dignity than support; a man supports his family; a state maintains an army or navy. To prop is always partial, signifying to add support to something that is insecure. See ABET; AID; ENDURE; KEEP; LEAN; LIVE; PROP.—Ant.: abandon, betray, break down, cast down, demolish, desert, destroy, drop, let go, overthrow, throw down, wreck.—Prep.: the roof is supported by, on, or upon pillars; the family was supported on or upon a pittance, or by charity.—sup-port"a-bil'i-ty, n.—sup-port'a-bl(e[P], a. That may be supported; bearable; endurable. —sup-port'a-bl(e-ness[P], n.—sup-port'a-bly, adv.—sup-port'er, n.

sup-port', n. 1. The act of supporting. 2. One who or that which supports. 3. Subsistence. Syn.: see HELP; SUBSIDY.

sup-pose', 1 su-pōz'; 2 sŭ-pōs', v. [SUP-POSED'; SUP-POS'-ING.] I. t. 1. To think or imagine to oneself as true; believe. 2. To assume as true for the sake of argument or illustration. II. i. To frame a supposition; think. [< F. supposer, < sub-, under, + poser; see POSE[1], v.]

Syn.: conjecture, deem, guess, imagine, surmise, think. To suppose is temporarily to assume a thing as true, either with the expectation of finding it so or for the purpose of ascertaining what would follow if it were so. To conjecture is to put together the nearest available materials for a provisional opinion, always with some expectation of finding the facts to be as conjectured. To imagine is to form a mental image of something as existing, tho its actual existence may be unknown, or even impossible. To think, in this application, is to hold as the result of thought what is admitted not to be matter of exact or certain knowledge; as, I do not know, but I think this to be the fact: a more conclusive statement than would be made by the use of conjecture or suppose. See GUESS. Compare synonyms for HYPOTHESIS; SUSPECT.—Ant.: ascertain, conclude, discover, know, prove.—sup-pos'a-bl(e[P], a. That may be supposed. —sup-pos'a-bly, adv.—sup-posed', pa. Accepted as genuine; imagined: often ironical.—sup-pos'ed-ly, adv.—sup-pos'er, n.

Syn.: alike, correspondent, corresponding, equivalent, identical, interchangeable, like, same, similar, synonymic. In the strictest sense, synonymous words scarcely exist; rarely, if ever, are any two words in any language equivalent or identical in meaning; where a difference in meaning can not be easily shown, a difference in usage commonly exists, so that the words are not interchangeable. By synonymous words we usually understand words that coincide or nearly coincide in some part of their meaning, and may hence within certain limits be used interchangeably, while outside of these limits they may differ very greatly in meaning and use. It is the office of a work on synonyms to point out these correspondences and differences, that language may have the flexibility that comes from freedom of selection within the common limits, with the perspicuity and precision that result from exact choice of the fittest word to express each shade of meaning outside of the common limits. To consider synonymous words identical is fatal to accuracy; to forget that they are similar, to some extent equivalent, and sometimes interchangeable, is destructive of freedom and variety.—sy-non'y-mous-ly, adv.—sy-non'y-my, n. [-MIES[z], pl.] 1. The quality of being synonymous; the expressing or extending of an idea by the use of synonyms. 2. A system of synonyms; the use and nice discrimination of synonyms. 3. A list of synonyms. syn″o-nym'ics‡.

syst., abbr. System.

sys'tem, 1 sis'tem; 2 sȳs'tĕm, n. 1. Orderly combination or arrangement, as of parts or elements, into a whole; specif., such combination according to some rational principle. 2. In science and philosophy, an orderly collection of logically related principles and facts. scientific system‡. 3. An orderly classification. classificatory system‡. 4. Any group or domain of fact and truth regarded as a whole. 5. A whole as made up of constitutive parts; as, the solar system; a railroad system. 6. The state or quality of being in order or orderly; orderliness; method. 7. Biol. (1) An assemblage of organic structures composed of similar elements and combined for the same general functions; as, the nervous system. (2) The entire body, taken as a functional whole. [< Gr.[LL] systēma, < syn, together, + histemi, stand.]

Syn.: manner, method, mode, order, regularity, rule. Order in this connection denotes a fact or a result; as, these papers are in order. Method denotes a process; rule an authoritative requirement or an established course of things; system, not merely a law of action or procedure, but a comprehensive plan; manner refers to the external qualities of actions, and to those often as settled and characteristic; we speak of a system of taxation, a method of collecting taxes, the rules by which assessments are made; or we say, as a rule the payments are heaviest at a certain time of year; a just tax may be made odious by the manner of its collection. Regularity applies to even disposition of objects or uniform recurrence of acts in a series. There may be regularity without order, as in the recurrence of paroxysms of disease or insanity; there may be order without regularity, as in the arrangement of furniture in a room, where the objects are placed at varying distances. Order commonly implies the design of an intelligent agent or the appearance or suggestion of such design; regularity applies to an actual uniform disposition or recurrence with no suggestion of purpose, and as applied to human affairs is less intelligent and more mechanical than order. The most perfect order is often secured with least regularity, as in a fine essay or oration. The same may be said of system. There is a regularity of dividing a treatise into topics, paragraphs, and sentences, that is destructive of true rhetorical system. taste'ful, a. 1. Conforming to taste. 2. Possessing good taste. 3‖. Savory.

Syn.: artistic, chaste, dainty, delicate, delicious, elegant, esthetic, esthetical, exquisite, fastidious, fine, nice, tasty. That which is elegant is made so not merely by nature, but by art and culture; a woodland dell may be beautiful or picturesque, but would not ordinarily be termed elegant. Tasteful refers to that in which the element of taste is more prominent, standing, as it were, more by itself, while in elegant it is blended as part of the whole. Tasty is an inferior word, used colloquially in a similar sense. Chaste (primarily pure) denotes in literature and art that which is true to the higher and finer feelings and free from all excess or meretricious ornament. Dainty and delicate refer to the lighter and finer elements of taste and beauty, dainty tending in personal use to an excessive scrupulousness which is more fully expressed by fastidious. Nice and delicate both refer to exact adaptation to some standard; as regards matters of taste, delicate is a higher and more discriminating word than nice, and is always used in a favorable sense; a delicate distinction is one worth observing; a nice distinction may be so, or may be overstrained and unduly subtle; fine in such use is closely similar to delicate and nice, but (tho capable of an unfavorable sense) has commonly a suggestion of positive excellence or admirableness; a fine touch does something; fine perceptions are to some purpose; delicate is capable of the single unfavorable sense of frail or fragile; as, a delicate constitution. Esthetic or esthetical refers to beauty or the appreciation of the beautiful, especially from the philosophic point of view. Exquisite denotes the utmost perfection of the elegant in minute details; we speak of an elegant garment, an exquisite lace. Exquisite is also applied to intense keenness of any feeling; as, exquisite delight; exquisite pain. See BEAUTIFUL; DELICIOUS; FINE.—Ant.: clumsy, coarse, deformed, disgusting, displeasing, distasteful, fulsome, gaudy, grotesque, harsh, hideous, horrid, inartistic, inharmonious, meretricious, offensive, rough, rude, rugged, tawdry.—taste'ful-ly, adv.—taste'ful-ness, n.—taste'less, a. 1. Having no flavor; insipid; dull. 2. Having lost the sense of taste. 3. Devoid of esthetic taste. -ly, adv. -ness, n.—tast'y, a. 1. Having a fine flavor; savory. 2. [Colloq.] Tasteful.—tast'i-ly, adv.—tast'i-ness, n.

teach, 1 tīch; 2 tēch, v. [TAUGHT; TEACH'ING.] I. t. 1. To impart knowledge to by lessons; give instruction to; guide by precept or example; instruct. 2. To give instruction in; make known; communicate the knowledge of. 3. To train by practise or exercise; impart skill, facility, etc., to. 4†. To guide; conduct. II. i. To impart knowledge; give instruction. [< AS. tæcan, teach.]

Syn.: discipline, drill, educate, enlighten, give instruction, give lessons, indoctrinate, inform, initiate, instruct, nurture, school, train, tutor. To teach is simply to communicate knowledge; to instruct (originally, to build in or into, put in order) is to impart knowledge with special method and completeness; instruct has also an authoritative sense nearly equivalent to command. To educate is to draw out or develop harmoniously the mental powers, and, in the fullest sense, the moral powers as well. To train is to direct to a certain result powers already existing. Train is used in preference to educate when the reference is to the inferior animals or to the physical powers of man; as to train a horse; to train the hand or eye. To discipline is to bring into habitual and complete subjection to authority. To nurture is to furnish the care and sustenance necessary for physical, mental, and moral growth; nurture is a more tender word than educate. Syn.: article, condition, expression, member, name, phrase, word. Term in its figurative uses always retains something of its literal sense of a boundary or limit. The articles of a contract or other instrument are simply the portions into which it is divided for convenience; the terms are the essential statements on which its validity depends—as it were, the landmarks of its meaning or power; a condition is a contingent term, which may become fixed upon the happening of some contemplated event. In logic a term is one of the essential members of a proposition, the boundary of statement in some one direction. Thus in general use term is more restricted than word, expression, or phrase; a term is a word that limits meaning to a fixed point of statement or to a special class of subjects; as, when we speak of the definition of terms, that is of the key-words in any discussion; or we say "that is a legal or scientific term." See BOUNDARY; DICTION.—term'less, a. 1. Of boundless extent or duration. 2. Independent of conditions. 3†. Inexpressible.

Syn.: brief, compact, compendious, concise, condensed, laconic, pithy, sententious, short, succinct. Anything short or brief is of relatively small extent. That which is concise is trimmed down, and that which is condensed is, as it were, pressed together, so as to include as much as possible within a small space. That which is compendious gathers the substance of a matter into a few words, weighty and effective. The succinct has an alert effectiveness as if girded for action. The summary is compacted to the utmost, often to the point of abruptness; as, we speak of a summary statement or a summary dismissal. That which is terse has an elegant and finished completeness within the smallest possible compass. A sententious style is one abounding in sentences that are singly striking or memorable, apart from the context; the word may be used invidiously of that which is pretentiously oracular. A pithy utterance gives the gist of a matter effectively, whether in rude or elegant style.—Ant.: diffuse, lengthy, long, prolix, tedious, verbose, wordy.—terse'ly, adv.—terse'ness, n.

Syn.: accordingly, because, hence, since, then, thence, whence, wherefore. Therefore is the most precise and formal word for expressing the direct conclusion of a chain of reasoning; then carries a similar but slighter sense of inference, which it gives incidentally rather than formally; as, "All men are mortal; Cæsar is a man; therefore Cæsar is mortal"; or, "The contract is awarded; then there is no more to be said." Consequently denotes a direct result, but more frequently of a practical than a theoretical kind; as, "Important matters demand my attention; consequently I shall not sail to-day." Consequently is rarely used in the formal conclusions of logic or mathematics, but marks rather the freer and looser style of rhetorical argument. Accordingly denotes correspondence, which may or may not be consequence; it is often used in narration; as, "The soldiers were eager and confident; accordingly they sprang forward at the word of command." Thence is a word of more sweeping inference than therefore, applying not merely to a single set of premises, but often to all that has gone before, including the reasonable inferences that have not been formally stated. Wherefore is the correlative of therefore, and whence of hence or thence, appending the inference or conclusion to the previous statement without a break. [< AS. teorian, tire, be tired.]

Syn.: exhaust, fag, fatigue, harass, jade, wear out, weary. To tire is to reduce one's strength in any degree by exertion; one may be tired just enough to make rest pleasant, or even unconsciously tired, becoming aware of the fact only when he ceases the exertion; or, on the other hand, he may be, according to the common phrase, "too tired to stir"; but for this extreme condition the stronger words are commonly used. One who is fatigued suffers from a conscious and painful lack of strength as the result of some overtaxing; an invalid may be fatigued with very slight exertion; when one is wearied, the painful lack of strength is the result of long-continued demand or strain; one is exhausted when the strain has been so severe and continuous as utterly to consume the strength, so that further exertion is for the time impossible. One is jagged by drudgery; he is jaded by incessant repetition of the same act until it becomes increasingly difficult or well-nigh impossible; as, a horse is jaded by a long and unbroken journey. See WEAR.—tired, pa. -ly, adv. -ness, n.—tire′less, a. Proof against fatigue; untiring. trans-, 1 trans- or tranz-; 2 trăns- or trănz-, prefix. Across; beyond; through. [< L. trans-, < trans, across.]

trans-act'd, 1 trans-[or tranz-]akt'; 2 trăns-[or trănz-]ăct', v. I. t. To carry through; accomplish; do. II‖. i. To do business. [< L. trans, through, + ago, do.]

Syn.: accomplish, act, carry on, conduct, do, negotiate, perform, treat.. There are many acts that one may do, accomplish, or perform unaided; what he transacts is by means of or in association with others; one may do a duty, perform a vow, accomplish a task, but he transacts business, since that always involves the agency of others. To negotiate and to treat are likewise collective acts, but negotiate implies deliberation with adjustment of mutual claims and interests, while transact implies execution. Notes, bills of exchange, loans, and treaties are said to be negotiated, the word so used covering not merely the preliminary consideration, but the final settlement. Nations may treat of peace without result, but when a treaty is negotiated peace is secured; the citizens of the two nations are then free to transact business with one another.—trans-ac'tor, n.

trans-ac'tion, n. 1. The management of any affair. 2. Something transacted; an affair. 3. pl. Published reports, as of a learned society.

Syn.: act, action, affair, business, deed, doing, proceeding. One's acts or deeds may be exclusively his own; his transactions involve the agency or participation of others. A transaction is something completed; a proceeding is or is viewed as something in progress; but since transaction is often used to include the steps leading to the conclusion, while proceedings may result in action, the dividing line between the two words becomes sometimes quite faint. tho transaction often emphasizes the fact of something done, or brought to a conclusion. Both transactions and proceedings are used of the records of a deliberative body, especially when published: strictly used, the two are distinguished. See ACT; BUSINESS.

(2) In the Kantian system; having an a priori character; transcending experience. (3) Rising above the common notions of men; with the Cartesians, pertaining to body and spirit alike. 3. Wildly speculative; above, beyond, or contrary to common sense.

Syn.: a priori, intuitive, original, primordial, transcendent. Intuitive truths are those which are in the mind independently of all experience, not being derived from experience nor limited by it, as that the whole is greater than a part, or that things which are equal to the same thing are equal to one another. All intuitive truths or beliefs are transcendental. But transcendental is a wider term than intuitive, including all within the limits of thought that is not derived from experience, as the ideas of space and time. "Being is transcendental. . . . As being can not be included under any genus, but transcends them all, so the properties or affections of being have also been called transcendental." Krauf-Fleming Vocab. Philos. p. 530. "Transcendent he [Kant] employed to denote what is wholly beyond experience, being neither given as an a posteriori nor a priori element of cognition—what therefore transcends every category of thought." K.-F. Vocab. Philos. p. 531. Transcendental has been applied in the language of the Emersonian school to the soul's supposed intuitive knowledge of things divine and human, so far as they are capable of being known to man. Transcendent, transcendental, and intuitive are opposed to empirical; or, according to the philosophy of Kant, transcendent is opposed to immanent, and transcendental to empirical. See MYSTERIOUS.

tran′sient, 1 tran′shent; 2 trăn′shĕnt, a. 1. Passing before the vision in a brief time; of short duration; brief; hasty. 2. [Colloq., U. S.] Not permanent; temporary; casual. 3. Proceeding from one place or object to another; imparted; as, transient heat. [< L. transien(t-)s, ppr. of transeo, < trans, over, + eo, go.]

Syn.: brief, ephemeral, evanescent, fleeting, flitting, flying, fugitive, momentary, passing, short, temporary, transitory. A thing is transient which in fact is not lasting; a thing is transitory which by its very nature must soon pass away; a thing is temporary which is intended to last or be made use of but a little while; as, a transient joy; this transitory life; a temporary chairman. Ephemeral, literally lasting but for a day, often marks more strongly than transient exceeding brevity of duration; it agrees with transitory in denoting that its object is destined to pass away, but is stronger, as denoting not only its certain but its speedy extinction; thus that which is ephemeral is looked upon as at once slight and perishable, and the word carries often a suggestion of contempt; man's life is transitory, a butterfly's existence is ephemeral; with no solid qualities or worthy achievements a pretender may sometimes gain an ephemeral popularity. That which is fleeting is viewed as in the act of passing swiftly by, and that which is fugitive as eluding attempts to detain it; that which is evanescent is in the act of vanishing even while we gaze, as the hues of the sunset.—Ant.: abiding, enduring, eternal, everlasting, immortal, imperishable, lasting, permanent, perpetual, persistent, undying, unfading.

un-[1], prefix. Not: used to express negation, incompleteness, or opposition. [< AS. un-, = L. in-, = Gr. an-, a-, not.]

un-[2], prefix. Back: used to express the reversal of the action of the verb. [< AS. un-, on-, ond-, an-, and-, back.]

The following list contains some of the more noticeable of the many self-explaining words beginning with un- (either un-[1] or un-[2]). (1) In the verbs in the list un- gives the sense of reversal (see UN-[2] above); as, *un*chain, "to loose the chains of." (2) In the nouns and the adjectives (including participles in -ing and -ed) it has simple negative force, except in such of the words in -ed and -ing as may be regarded as participles of a corresponding verbal form in UN-[1]. Thus, unburdened may be regarded as an adjective (UN-[1] + BURDENED), meaning "not burdened," or as a participle of the verb unburden, meaning "relieved of a burden." In- as a prefix to adjectives expresses in usage more of negation, un- more of mere lack or privation; as, a child's *un*artistic speech, a writer's *in*artistic diction. In general, in- is more confined to words of Latin origin. Pronunciations, definitions, etymologies, etc., may be found by referring to the primitive word.

Syn.: coalition, combination, conjunction, junction, juncture, oneness, unification, unity. Unity is oneness, the state of existing as essentially one, especially of that which never has been divided or of that which can not be conceived of as resolved into parts; as, the unity of God or the unity of the human soul. Union is a bringing together of things that have been distinct, so that they combine or coalesce to form a new whole, or the state or condition of things thus brought together; in a union the separate individuality of the things united is never lost sight of; we speak of the union of the parts of a fractured bone or of the union of hearts in marriage. But unity can be said of that which is manifestly or even conspicuously made up of parts, when a single purpose or ideal is so subserved by all that their possible separateness is lost sight of; as, we speak of the unity of the human body, or of the unity of the church. See ALLIANCE; ASSOCIATION; ATTACHMENT; HARMONY; MARRIAGE.—Ant.: analysis, contrariety, decomposition, disconnection, disjunction, dissociation, disunion, division, divorce, separation, severance.—the Union. 1. The United States regarded as a national unit. 2. *Eng. Units are either fundamental, that is, arbitrarily chosen, or derived, that is, defined in terms of the fundamental units. The fundamental units are those of length (as the yard and meter), of mass (as the pound and kilogram), and of time (as the second). The centimeter-gram-second system, based on the centimeter, gram, and second, was established by the British Association in 1861. The principal derived units are the geometrical and mechanical units, as those of area, volume, velocity, force, etc., and the electrical and magnetic units, as those of resistance, current, magnetic intensity, etc. [Abbr. of UNITY.]

use'less, 1 yūs'les; 2 yụs'lĕs, a. Being of no use; not serving, or not capable of serving, any beneficial purpose.

Syn.: abortive, bootless, fruitless, futile, ineffectual, nugatory, null, profitless, unavailing, unprofitable, unserviceable, vain, valueless, worthless. That which is bootless, fruitless, or profitless fails to accomplish any valuable result; that which is abortive, ineffectual, or unavailing fails to accomplish a result that it was, or was supposed to be, adapted to accomplish. That which is useless, futile, or vain is inherently incapable of accomplishing a specified result. Useless in the widest sense signifies not of use for any valuable purpose, and is thus closely similar to valueless and worthless. Fruitless is more final than ineffectual, as applying to the sum or harvest of endeavor. That which is useless lacks actual fitness for a purpose; that which is vain lacks imaginable fitness. See VAIN; WASTE.—Ant.: see synonyms for USEFUL. — use'less-ly, adv. — use'less-ness, n.

Syn.: advantage, advantageousness, avail, benefit, expediency, profit, service, serviceableness, use, usefulness. Utility is somewhat more abstract and philosophical than usefulness or use, and is often employed to denote adaptation to produce a valuable result, while usefulness denotes the actual production of such result. We contrast beauty and utility. We say of an invention, its utility is questionable, or, on the other hand, its usefulness has been proved by ample trial, or, I have found it of use; still, utility and usefulness are frequently interchanged. Expediency (literally, the getting the foot out) refers primarily to escape from or avoidance of some difficulty or trouble; either expediency or utility may be used to signify profit or advantage considered apart from right as the ground of moral obligation, or of actions that have a moral character, expediency denoting immediate advantage on a contracted view, and especially with reference to avoiding danger, difficulty, or loss, while utility may be so broadened as to cover all existence through all time, as in the utilitarian theory of morals. Policy is often used in a kindred sense, more positive than expediency, but narrower than utility, as in the proverb "Honesty is the best policy." See PROFIT; SERVICE. —Ant.: disadvantage, folly, futility, impolicy, inadequacy, inexpediency, inutility, unprofitableness, uselessness, worthlessness.—u-til"i-ta'ri-an. I. a. 1. Relating to utility; especially, placing utility above beauty or the amenities of life. 2. Pertaining to or advocating utilitarianism. II. n. One devoted to mere material utility; an advocate of utilitarianism.—u-til"i-ta'ri-an-ism, n. 1. Philos. A system that holds utility of some kind to be the end and criterion of all action, including moral action. 2. Devotion to mere material utility. u'til-ize, vt. [-IZED; -IZ"ING.] To make useful or serviceable; turn to practical account. u'til-ise‡.

va'cant, 1 vē'kənt; 2 vā'cant, a. 1. Containing or holding nothing; devoid of occupants; empty. 2. Not occupied; unemployed. 3. Without thought or expression; vague; expressionless; dull. 4. Having no incumbent, as an office. [F., < L. vacan(t-)s, ppr. of vaco, be empty.]

Syn.: blank, empty, unemployed, unfilled, unoccupied, vacuous, void, waste. That is empty which contains nothing; that is vacant which is without that which has filled or might be expected to fill it; vacant has extensive reference to rights or possibilities of occupancy. A vacant room may not be empty, and an empty house may not be vacant. Vacant, as derived from the Latin, is applied to things of some dignity; empty, from the Saxon, is preferred in speaking of slight, common, or homely matters, tho it may be applied with special force to the highest; we speak of empty space, a vacant lot, an empty dish, an empty sleeve, a vacant mind, an empty heart, an empty boast, a vacant office, a vacant hour. Void and devoid are rarely used in the literal sense, but for the most part confined to abstract relations, devoid being followed by of, and having with that addition the effect of a prepositional phrase; as, the article is devoid of sense; the contract is void for want of consideration. Waste, in this connection, applies to that which is made so by devastation or ruin, or gives an impression of desolation, especially as combined with vastness, probably from association of the words waste and vast: waste is applied also to uncultivated or unproductive land, if of considerable extent; we speak of a waste tract or region, but not of a waste city lot. Vacuous refers to the condition of being empty or vacant, regarded as continuous or characteristic. See BLANK; IDLE.—Ant.: brimful, brimmed, brimming, busy, crammed, crowded, filled, full, gorged, inhabited, jammed, occupied, overflowing, packed, replete.—va'can-cy, n. [-CIES², pl.] 1. The state of being vacant. 2. That which is vacant; a gap; a place destitute of an incumbent. 3. Unoccupied time; leisure.—va'cant-ly, adv.

Syn.: hireling, mercenary, purchasable, salable. Mercenary has especial application to character or disposition; as, a mercenary spirit; mercenary motives—i. e., a spirit or motives to which money is the chief consideration or the moving principle. Thus, etymologically, the mercenary can be hired, while the venal are openly or actually for sale; hireling (AS. hyrling, from hyr) signifies serving for hire or pay, or having the spirit or character of one who works or of that which is done directly for hire or pay. The hireling, the mercenary, and the venal are alike in making principle, conscience, and honor of less account than gold or sordid considerations; but the mercenary and venal may be simply open to the bargain and sale which the hireling has already consummated; a clergyman may be mercenary in making place and pay of undue importance while not venal enough to forsake his own communion for another for any reward that could be offered him. The mercenary may retain much show of independence; hireling service sacrifices self-respect as well as principle; a public officer who makes his office tributary to private speculation in which he is interested is mercenary; if he receives a stipulated recompense for administering his office at the behest of some leader, faction, corporation, or the like, he is both hireling and venal; if he gives essential advantages for pay, without subjecting himself to any direct domination, his course is venal, but not hireling.—Ant.: disinterested, honest, honorable, incorruptible, patriotic, unpurchasable.—ve-nal'i-ty, n.—ve'nal-ly, adv.

ven'er-a-bl(e[F], 1 ven'ər-ə-bl; 2 vĕn'er-a-bl, a. 1. Meriting or commanding veneration: now usually implying age. 2. Exciting reverential feelings. [OF., < L. venerabilis, < veneror, revere.] Syn.: see ANCIENT.—ven'er-a-bl(e-ness[F], n. ven"er-a-bil'i-ty†.—ven'er-a-bly, adv.—ven'er-ate, vt. [-AT"ED[d]; -AT"ING.] To look upon or regard with honor and deference; revere.

Syn.: adore, honor, respect, revere, reverence. In the highest sense, to revere or reverence is to hold in mingled love and honor with something of sacred fear, as for that which while lovely is sublimely exalted and brings upon us by contrast a sense of our unworthiness or inferiority; to revere is a wholly spiritual act; to reverence is often, tho not necessarily, to give outward expression to the reverential feeling; we revere or reverence the divine majesty. Revere is a stronger word than reverence or venerate. To venerate is to hold in exalted honor without fear, and is applied to objects less removed from ourselves than those we revere, being said especially of aged persons, of places or objects having sacred associations, and of abstractions; we venerate an aged pastor, the dust of heroes or martyrs, lofty virtue or self-sacrifice, or some great cause, as that of civil or religious liberty; we do not venerate God, but revere or reverence him. We adore with a humble yet free outflowing of soul. See ADMIRE; DEFER.—Ant.: contemn, despise, disdain, dishonor, disregard, scoff at, scorn, slight, spurn.

—ven"er-a'tion, n. The act of venerating; reverence.

Syn.: adoration, awe, dread, reverence. Awe is inspired by that in which there is sublimity or majesty so overwhelming as to awaken a feeling akin to fear; in awe, considered by itself, there is no element of esteem or affection, tho the sense of vastness, power, or grandeur in the object is always present. Dread is a shrinking apprehension or expectation of possible harm awakened by any one of many objects or causes, from that which is overwhelmingly vast and mighty to that which is productive of momentary physical pain; in its higher uses dread approaches the meaning of awe, but with more of chilliness and cowering, and without that subjection of soul to the grandeur and worthiness of the object that is involved in awe. Awe is preoccupied with the object that inspires it; dread with apprehension of personal consequences. Reverence and veneration are less overwhelming than awe or dread, and suggest something of esteem, affection, and personal nearness. We may feel awe of that which we can not reverence, as a grandly terrible ocean storm; awe of the divine presence is more distant and less trustful than reverence. Veneration is commonly applied to things which are not subjects of awe. Adoration, in its full sense, is loftier than veneration, less restrained and awed than reverence, and with more of the spirit of direct, active, and joyful worship. See REVERENCE. Compare VENERATE.—Ant.: contempt, disdain, dishonor, disregard, scorn.—ven'er-a"tor, n.

ve-ne're-al, 1 vɪ-nī'rɪ-əl; 2 ve-nē're-al, a. 1. Pertaining to or proceeding from sexual intercourse. 2. Communicated by sexual relations with an affected person; as, a venereal disease. [< L. Venereus, < Venus, Venus.]

ve'ni-al, 1 vī'nɪ-əl; 2 vē'ni-al, a. That may be pardoned or overlooked; excusable. [OF., < L.[LL] venia, pardon.]

Syn.: excusable, pardonable, slight, trivial. Aside from its technical ecclesiastical use, venial is always understood as marking some fault comparatively slight or trivial. A venial offense is one readily overlooked; a pardonable offense requires more serious consideration, but on deliberation is found to be susceptible of pardon. Excusable is scarcely applied to offenses, but to matters open to doubt or criticism rather than direct censure; so used, it often fails little short of justifiable; as, I think, under those circumstances, his action was excusable.—Ant.: inexcusable, mortal, unpardonable.—ve"ni-al'i-ty, n. ve'ni-al-ness‡.—ve'ni-al-ly, adv.

Ven'ice, 1 ven'ıs; 2 vĕn'ĭç, n. A seaport city of N. E. Syn.: candor, fact, frankness, honesty, ingenuousness, reality, truth, truthfulness, verity. Truth is primarily and verity is always a quality of thought or speech, especially of speech, as in exact conformity to fact. Veracity is properly a quality of a person, the habit of speaking and the disposition to speak the truth; a habitual liar may on some occasions speak the truth, but that does not constitute him a man of veracity; on the other hand, a person of undoubted veracity may state (through ignorance or misinformation) what is not the truth. Truthfulness is a quality that may inhere either in a person or in his statements or beliefs. Candor, frankness, honesty, and ingenuousness are allied with veracity, and fact, reality, and verity with truth, while truthfulness may accord with either. Truth in a secondary sense may be applied to intellectual action or moral character, in the former case becoming a close synonym of veracity; as, I know him to be a man of truth.—Ant.: deceit, deception, delusion, duplicity, error, fabrication, fallacy, falsehood, falsity, fiction, guile, imposture, lie, untruth.

ve-ran'da, 1 vı-ran'də; 2 ve-răn'da, n. An open portico or gallery along the side of a building. [< Hind. varandā, < O. Sp. varanda.] ve-ran'dah‡.

verb, 1 vūrb; 2 vĕrb, n. That part of speech which asserts, declares, or predicates something. [< L.[s] verbum, word.]—ver'bal. I. a. 1. Pertaining to words rather than the ideas they convey. 2. Uttered by the mouth; not written; oral. 3. Corresponding word for word; literal. 4. Gram. Pertaining to or derived from a verb.

Syn.: literal, oral, vocal. These words, whose etymology would make them similar in meaning, are differentiated in usage by their applications. Oral (L. os, the mouth) signifies uttered through the mouth or (in common phrase) by word of mouth; vocal (L. vox, the voice) signifies of or pertaining to the voice, uttered or modulated by the voice, and especially uttered with or sounding with full, resonant voice; literal (L. litera, a letter) signifies consisting of or expressed by letters, or according to the letter in the broader sense of the exact meaning or requirement of the words used; what is called "the letter of the law" is its literal meaning without going behind what is expressed by the letters on the page. Thus oral applies to that which is given by spoken words in distinction from that which is written or printed; as, oral tradition; an oral examination. By this rule we should in strictness speak of an oral contract or an oral message, but verbal contract and verbal message, as indicating that which is by spoken rather than by written word, have become so fixed in the language that they can probably never be changed; this usage is also in line with other idioms of the language; as, "I give you my word"; "a true man's word is as good as his bond"; "by word of mouth," etc. A verbal translation may be oral or written, so that it is word for word; a literal translation follows the construction and idiom of the original as well as the words; thus a literal translation is more than one that is merely verbal; both verbal and literal are opposed to free. In the same sense, of attending to words only, we speak of verbal criticism, a verbal change. Vocal has primary reference to the human voice; as, vocal sounds, vocal music; vocal may be applied within certain limits to inarticulate sounds given forth by other animals than man; as, the woods were vocal with the songs of birds; oral is never so applied.

Syn.: see CARE.—vigilance committee, a body of men self-organized for the administration of summary justice.—vig'i-lant, a. Being on the alert; watchful.

Syn.: active, alert, awake, careful, cautious, circumspect, on the alert, on the lookout, sleepless, wakeful, wary, watchful, wide-awake. Vigilant implies more sustained activity and more intelligent volition than alert; one may be habitually alert by reason of native quickness of perception and thought, or one may be momentarily alert under some excitement or expectancy; one who is vigilant is so with thoughtful purpose. One is vigilant against danger or harm; he may be alert or watchful for good as well as against evil; he is wary in view of suspected stratagem, trickery, or treachery. A person may be wakeful because of some merely physical excitement or excitability, as through insomnia; yet he may be utterly careless and negligent in his wakefulness, the reverse of watchful; a person who is truly watchful must keep himself wakeful while on watch, in which case wakeful has something of mental quality. Watchful, from the Saxon, and vigilant, from the Latin, are almost exact equivalents; but vigilant has somewhat more of sharp definiteness and somewhat more suggestion of volition; one may be habitually watchful; one is vigilant of set purpose and for direct cause. See ALERT.—Ant.: careless, drowsy, dull, heedless, inattentive, incautious, inconsiderate, neglectful, negligent, oblivious, thoughtless, unwary.—vig'i-lant-ly, adv.

Syn.: chastity, duty, excellence, faithfulness, goodness, honesty, honor, integrity, justice, morality, probity, purity, rectitude, righteousness, rightness, truth, uprightness, virtuousness, worth, worthiness. Virtue is goodness that is victorious through trial, perhaps through temptation and conflict. Goodness, the being morally good, may be much less than virtue, as lacking the strength that comes from trial and conflict, or it may be very much more than virtue, as rising sublimely above the possibility of temptation and conflict—the infantile as contrasted with the divine goodness. Virtue is distinctively human; we do not predicate it of God. Morality is conformity to the moral law in action, whether in matters concerning ourselves or others, whether with or without right principle. Honesty and probity are used especially of one's relations to his fellow men, probity being to honesty much what virtue is to goodness; probity is honesty tried and proved, especially in those things that are beyond the reach of legal requirement; above the commercial sense, honesty may be applied to the highest truthfulness of the soul to and with itself and its Maker. Integrity, in the full sense, is moral wholeness without a flaw; when used, as it often is, of contracts and dealings, it has reference to inherent character and principle, and denotes much more than superficial or conventional honesty. Honor is a lofty honesty that scorns fraud or wrong as base and unworthy of itself. Purity is freedom from all admixture, especially of that which debases; it is chastity both of heart and of life, but of the life because from the heart. Duty, the rendering of what is due to any person or in any relation, is, in this connection, the fulfilment of moral obligation. Rectitude and righteousness denote conformity to the standard of right, whether in heart or act; righteousness is used especially in the religious sense. Uprightness refers especially to conduct. Virtuousness is a quality of the soul or of action; in the latter sense it is the essence of virtuous action. Compare INNOCENT; JUSTICE; RELIGION.—Ant.: evil, vice, viciousness, wickedness, wrong. See synonyms for SIN.—vir′tu-al, a. 1. Being in effect, but not in form or appearance: often opposed to actual or real. 2. Acting or having efficacy without the agency of anything material. -ly, adv.—vir″tu-al′i-ty, n. The state or quality of being virtual.

wis'dom, 1 wiz'dəm; 2 wiz'dom, n. 1. The power of true and just discernment. 2. Sound judgment. 3. A high degree of knowledge. 4. A wise saying. [< AS. wīsdōm, < wīs, wise; and see -DOM.]

Syn.: attainment, depth, discernment, discretion, enlightenment, erudition, foresight, information, insight, judgment, judiciousness, knowledge, learning, lore, prescience, profundity, prudence, reason, reasonableness, sagacity, sense, skill, understanding. Enlightenment, erudition, information, knowledge, learning, and skill are acquired, as by study or practise. Insight, judgment, profundity or depth, reason, sagacity, sense, and understanding are native qualities of mind, but capable of increase by cultivation. The other qualities are on the border-line. Wisdom is mental power acting upon the materials that fullest knowledge gives in the most effective way. There may be what is termed "practical wisdom" that looks only to material results; but in its full sense wisdom implies the highest and noblest exercise of all the faculties of the moral nature as well as of the intellect. Prudence is a lower and more negative form of the same virtue, respecting outward and practical matters, and largely with a view of avoiding loss and injury. Judgment, the power of forming decisions, especially correct decisions, is broader and more positive than prudence, leading one to do, as readily as to refrain from doing; but judgment is more limited in range and less exalted in character than wisdom. Skill is far inferior to wisdom, consisting largely in the practical application of acquired knowledge, power, and habitual processes, or in the ingenious contrivance that makes such application possible. In the making of something perfectly useless there may be great skill, but no wisdom. Compare ACUMEN; ASTUTE; KNOWLEDGE; PRUDENCE; SAGACIOUS.—Ant.: absurdity, error, fatuity, folly, foolishness, idiocy, imbecility, imprudence, indiscretion, miscalculation, misjudgment, nonsense, senselessness, shallowness, silliness, stupidity. Compare synonyms for ABSURD; IDIOCY.—Book of Wisdom of Solomon, a book of the Apocrypha, consisting of a hymn in praise of wisdom: ascribed by tradition to Solomon, but probably dating from the first or second century B. C. Wis'dom‡.—wis'dom-tooth", n. The third molar of the human jaw, appearing about the twentieth year.

wise, 1 wīz; 2 wiz, a. [WIS'ER; WIS'EST.] 1. Possessed of wisdom; seeing clearly what is conducive to one's highest interests, and in one's own conduct choosing the best end and the best means for reaching such end; in a lower sense, sagacious; also, shrewd. 2. Marked by wisdom; prudent; sensible. 3. Having great learning; erudite. 4. Suited to a man of wisdom; sage. 5. Having practical knowledge of the arts or sciences. 6. Versed in mysterious things. [< AS. wīs, wise, < √ of witan, know.]

Syn.: deep, discerning, enlightened, erudite, intellectual, intelligent, judicious, knowing, profound, rational, reasonable, sagacious, sage, sapient, sensible, solid, sound, thoughtful. See EXPEDIENT; POLITIC; PRUDENT; SAGACIOUS.—Ant.: see synonyms for ABSURD; IGNORANT.—the wise men. 1. See MAGI. 2. The so-called seven wise men of Greece, who, during the period 620–550 B. C., were distinguished for wisdom, namely, Thales of Miletus, Periander of Corinth, Pittacus of Mitylene, Cleobulus of Rhodes, Bias of Priene, Chilon of Sparta, and Solon of Athens.—wise'ly, adv.

-wise, suffix. Way or manner; the noun wise used as a termination; as, no*wise*, like*wise*: often confused with -way, -ways.

wise'a"cre, 1 wīz'ē"kər; 2 wiz'ā"ker, n. One who affects great wisdom; hence, a dunce. [< G. weissager, < OHG. wīzago, soothsayer.]

wish[1], 1 wish; 2 wish, v. I. t. 1. To have a wish for; desire; want. 2. To frame or express a wish of kindness for. 3†. To commend to the care of another. II. i. To have a wish; feel a longing. [< AS. wȳscan, wish.]

Syn.: want. To want always implies to be without or to be in need of, and may be said of things that can have no wish, as when we say the wall wants two inches of six feet. When want is used as the correlative of wish, there is always implied, in correct use, the sense of need as well as of desire; the epicure may wish for some tempting viand after a full meal; the hungry man wants food. See DESIRE; WILL.—wish'er, n.

"A NOTABLE ADVANCE IN THE STUDY OF LANGUAGE"

The Boston Journal, Boston, Mass.: "The definitions alone make the dictionary superior to those commonly used. There are no such disappointing features as the ordinary dictionary presents. Each word is properly and clearly defined, and if another word be referred to, the definition of the other word completes the definition of the first. Briefly, there are no careless and unenlightening references back and forth. Thus by studying one word after another, knowledge is perfected, not obfuscated. The book is a notable advance in the study of the language."

THE COMPREHENSIVE STANDARD DICTIONARY

[Abridged from the Funk & Wagnalls New Standard Dictionary]

An ideal small dictionary for all general purposes—widely used in homes and offices, especially adapted, and already widely adopted for use in schools. Defines and explains more than 50,000 words and phrases. Contains 1,000 pictorial illustrations. All matter commonly in an appendix has place in vocabulary order; so also have valuable tables and plates. Everything makes for ease of reference. Note these interesting features:

Coins of the World; Constellations, Planets, Stars; the Metric System; Presidents and Ruling Sovereigns; Forms of Cut Diamonds; Types of Dogs; Forms of Knots and How to Make Them; Prefixes and Suffixes; Types of Cattle; Weights and Measures; Types of Cats; Birds; Barks of Trees; Examples of Architecture; Aeroplanes and the Zeppelin; Flowers, Fowl, Horses, Leaves, etc.

"Those who are unable to own a larger dictionary are safe in relying upon this dictionary. It has been prepared in the most scholarly and effective way."—C. E. Chadsey, Superintendent, Public Schools, Detroit, Mich.

"It is the smallest, cheapest, and most convenient dictionary that has the features necessary for the study of the English texts embraced in the College Entrance Requirements."—O. W. Snodgrass, Board of Education, Newark, N. J.

SPECIAL FEATURES:

Definitions by Definitive Statement.—Not by long and abstruse synonyms that must in turn be looked up.

Two Keys Are Included for Pronunciation; the revised scientific alphabet, and the text-book key or old system of notation.
